Yanks Lose One Bridgehead Over Elbe, Push Second Four Miles Nearer Berlin

Byrnes Helps Truman Edit His First Message

Address for Today
Shaped Aboard Train
On Return Journey
From Hyde Park

Aboard Truman Train En Route to Washington, April 15 (P).—President Truman toiled today over the address he will deliver tomorrow to Congress—the first since his elevation to the highest office.

With a crew of assistants, he smoothed some of the rough edges off the speech as he rode back to the Capital by special train after attending burial services for Franklin D. Roosevelt.

It is an address which the entire world is awaiting eagerly for indications of the course he will chart for winning the war and guaranteeing peace. He has promised to carry on where President Roosevelt left off, and no wide deviation of policy is expected.

Byrnes Advises on Speech

James F. Byrnes, who resigned but a few days ago as War Mobilization and Reconversion director, was one of Truman's principal advisers on the speech. Whether that augured a return of the former Senator and Supreme Court justice to a position high in Government was not yet apparent.

The address will be made before a joint session of Senate and House about 1 p. m. (EWT) tomorrow.

George Allen, former District of Columbia Commissioner and insurance executive, whipped together the first draft from suggestions made by various individuals.

"He pulled the suggestions together and did the spade work," one of Truman's assistants said.

Confers With Mrs. Roosevelt

The President finished lunch as his train was being serviced in the Mott Haven railroad yards at New York City. Seated around the table in the private car, the Rosalind Amundsen were Mrs. Truman, the "Truman" daughter, Margaret, Byrnes, Democratic National Chairman Robert E. Hannegan and Mrs. Hannegan, Democratic Treasurer Ed Bailey, and Colonel Harry Vaughan.

Vaughan served in the same brigade with Truman in the last war and was his secretary before entering service in this conflict. Now he is Truman's military aide. A bouquet of spring flowers was in the center of the dining table. After lunch Truman returned to the parlor of the private car and conferred with Allen. Mrs. Roosevelt came in a few minutes later with her son, Elliott, and sat down with the President on a settee. Elliott sat in a chair facing them. Mrs. Truman joined them shortly. They talked at length.

20 Found Dead In Wreckage Of Airliner

Morgantown, W. Va., April 15 (P). The wreckage of a Pennsylvania Central Airlines transport with 17 passengers and three crewmen dead was found today on a mountainside deep in the West Virginia hills where the liner crashed in storm weather yesterday.

The big plane, flying from Pittsburgh to Birmingham, was smashed in pieces and the bodies of the victims mangled. Wreckage lay strewn through a thousand yards of underbrush.

Searchers on foot reached the transport this afternoon after it had been spotted from the air by one of several planes searching since it was reported overdue last night. The plane, Flight No. 142, left Pittsburgh at 4:37 p. m. (EWT) yesterday.

Only Babble Left
The scene of the crash was in Cooper's Rock State Forest, situated in the Cheat Mountain range of Preston County.

Only a mass of smoldering rubble was left. Wrecks of smoke rose from charred wreckage. Clothing flung from broken tree tops.

Searchers discovered a watch.

Roosevelt Coffin Is Lowered Into Grave.

ON THE BANKS OF THE HUDSON—The coffin containing the body of the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt drops slowly into a grave in the flower garden of his estate on the banks of the Hudson River at Hyde Park, N. Y., as servicemen hold an American flag over the spot. To the left of the grave in first row are, left to right, Brig. Gen. Elliott Roosevelt, Mrs. Roosevelt, Anna Roosevelt Boettiger and Col. John Boettiger. Behind them are the late President's four daughters-in-law. Farther back at extreme left are President Truman, Mrs. Truman and their daughter.

U. S. May Ask Reds to Drop 3-Vote Plan

By Ben W. Gilbert

President Truman's invitation to Marshal Stalin to send Foreign Commissar V. M. Molotov to the forthcoming San Francisco Conference of the United Nations probably was taken on the advice of James F. Byrnes, former Director of War Mobilization and Reconversion, and may be a forerunner to an American request to the Soviet Union to withdraw its claim for additional votes in the proposed United Nations Assembly, informed observers here believed.

Byrnes, who attended the Yalta Conference of the "Big Three" as an aide to the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt, is known to be among those who have urged in the past that it be stressed to other major powers that this Nation's ability to act decisively in the foreign field is limited to a large extent by public opinion in this country.

The speed with which Stalin agreed to send Molotov in response to Truman's unprecedented request was expected to create immediate public confidence in Truman's conduct of foreign affairs. The president said SECURITY, Page 2, Column 2.

Roosevelt's Last Conscious Hour Described in Full Detail

Locust Valley, N. Y., April 15 (P). The last conscious hour of Franklin D. Roosevelt was described in detail today by the woman artist who was painting his portrait when he was stricken.

She is Mrs. Elizabeth Shoumatoff, a handsome woman of middle age, a well known artist who had painted the President before. She was telling the complete story for the first time in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Edward Ward, Jr.

Churches Join In Memorials To Roosevelt

By Robert Tate Allan

Washington yesterday was like a family bereft of its father, as church folk of varied creeds and walks of life prayed at memorial rites for the great man who had lived at 1600 Pennsylvania ave. n.w. In Constitution Hall, three blocks from the White House—which Americans prize as their national home and home of their political father—leaders of three faiths paid homage to the universally loved leader.

Meanwhile, as Franklin Delano Roosevelt was being laid away near his beloved Hudson River, the atmosphere around the White House was in sharp contrast to Saturday in this respect.

Where multitudes stood the day before, now a drizzle fell on empty benches in Lafayette Park. Passing to and from church services, some turned to look mournfully at the home of their late President. At historic Foundry Methodist Church, 16th and P sts., n.w., two Negro sextons, Stanley Smith and John Rucker made a black cross for the pew where President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Winston Churchill were seated.

At 12 o'clock, the President would be ready for the sitting of the portrait that I had started the day before," she said.

"When I arrived the President was in the room. Two of his cousins were sitting on the sofa. He was busy with a secretary, signing papers. The room was the dining room—sitting room—study of the Little White House.

"It was to be a life-size portrait. I had the easel brought and tried to get it in an inconspicuous way but the President, right

Last Journey Ends

Roosevelt's Body Laid to Rest In Garden of His Birthplace

By Christine Sadler

Hyde Park, N. Y., April 15.—In a hilltop garden above the Hudson, the Nation's thirty-first President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt—who traveled to many distant shores during his terms in the White House—was buried this morning less than 100 yards from the house in which he was born.

Sun from a radiant sky streamed over a century-old hedge of hemlock onto the faces of Government dignitaries and friends gathered to pay him final homage.

Banked high behind the grave were floral tributes from all over the world. Prime Minister Macdonnell King, arriving from Ottawa with the Earl of Athlone, personally added a bunch of red, white and blue flowers for Canada.

Symbol of Fallen Hero

Burial services, which were both simple and significant, began promptly at 10 o'clock with a slow-spaced salute of 21 guns for the dead leader. Then, to the strains of Chopin's "Funeral March" played by a West Point band, the horse-drawn caisson with its flag-draped casket moved slowly up the winding rear road which leads from a special siding to the ancestral Hyde Park home of the Roosevelts.

Following the caisson came a hooded and riderless horse with turned boots and a sword hanging in the saddle's stirrups. Immediately behind this symbol of a fallen hero were automobiles carrying Mrs. Roosevelt and the family and President Harry S. Truman and family.

Fala Is There

Fighter planes escorted by a bomber flew high over the rectangular garden while the band changed to "The Star-Spangled Banner" and then to "Nearer My God to Thee." Above the muted music and the whir of planes Hyde Park birds sang and chirruped loudly from tall oaks and in ancient trees just beginning to bloom.

Fala, the dead President's Scottish terrier, entered the garden with Mrs. James R. Roosevelt, widow of Franklin Roosevelt's half brother,

Skeptic Yanks See Proof of Nazi Atrocities

By Edward T. Follard

Washington Post War Correspondent
Ohrdruf, Germany, April 14.—Where atrocities are concerned most Americans are skeptics from Missouri, and that goes for our fighting men in Germany as well as the folk at home. They have to be shown.

The news of what happened in Ohrdruf a week or so ago—the massacre of the foreign slaves by their German SS masters—has attracted thousands of American soldiers to the concentration camp here. They come in by jeep and truck, officers and doughboys of Patton's Third Army, and they walk along Adolf Hitler Strasse until they come to the place where on April 3 the hideous deed was done.

The Post's correspondent, who has been a skeptic ever since the last war when men argued about Edith Cavell and the Belgian babies who were supposed to have had their hands cut off, drove all the way up here from Frankfurt to join in the grim procession.

The thing we had heard about was right before our eyes in the See FOLLARD, Page 2, Column 1.

Marines Nearing Northern Tip, South Okinawa Deadlock Holds

Guam (Monday), April 16 (P).—Southern Okinawa's artillery-blasted battle lines remained static yesterday but in the north Maj. Gen. Roy S. Geiger's Third Marine Amphibious Corps was within 10 miles of the island's northern tip.

United States forces now control the central two thirds of the strategic Ryukyu Island just 325 miles south of Japan proper. Infantrymen in the south were deadlocked along the "Little Siegfried Line" 4 miles north of the capital city of Naha for the twelfth

Soviet Armor Only 24 Miles From Berlin

London, April 15 (P).—The German radio said tonight that Russian armored forces had ripped new breaches in Berlin's outer defenses only 24 miles from the Nazi capital, while Marshal Stalin announced Soviet tanks rolling across Austria toward Hitler's hideout at Berchtesgaden had captured St. Poelten on the Vienna-Munich superhighway.

Nazi War Correspondent Armin Schoenberg, in a late front report, said Red army tank and infantry forces were attacking the approaches to Wriezen, 24 miles northeast of Berlin, in "furious breakthrough attempts" from bridgeheads across the Oder River.

3000 Nazis Captured
Moscow's nightly war bulletin did not confirm the report, but disclosed that Soviet troops had virtually wiped out the last German-held area of East Prussia by capturing more than 60 towns and villages in the Samland Peninsula west of Koenigsberg. More than 3000 prisoners were taken.

A four-army Russian storm, Berlin said, was gathering along a 170-mile front on the Oder and Neisse Rivers east, northeast and southeast of Berlin.

The battle already was blazing along at least a 57-mile front, by Berlin account, although German broadcasters varied in their opinions of the Red Army blows, some terming them "preparatory and of a local nature," others calling them the "first chapter of the all-out Russian offensive toward Berlin and central Germany."

Heavy Red Army blows, launched by Marshal Gregory G. Zhukov's first white Russian army, were concentrated on a 18-mile sector between the Oder River fortresses of Kuestrin and Frankfurt, Berlin reported.

Blazing Battles in East
A blazing battle was underway west of Kuestrin, itself 32 miles east of Berlin. DNB claimed that at least 108 Red Army tanks had been knocked out by German guns.

Transocean reported that Marshal Ivan S. Konev's rearguard fighters were gaining ground in See RUSSIA, Page 2, Column 7.

Patton Less Than 13 Miles From Cutting Reich in Two

7th Army 15 Miles
From Nuernberg;
Bayreuth, Wagner
Festival City, Falls

BULLETIN

Stockholm, April 15 (P).—American reconnaissance patrols have reached Berlin's western suburbs, the German-controlled Scandinavian Telegraph Bureau reported tonight from Berlin.

Paris, April 15 (P).—United States Ninth Army forces pounded 4 miles beyond the Elbe River today in furious fighting erupting 53 miles southwest of Berlin after the capital's defenders dealt the Americans a setback by smashing a second bridgehead farther north.

While the Germans committed at least three divisions to the Battle of Berlin, three American armies far to the south were overrunning the outer bastions of the Nazi mountain retreat. Vanguard units within 13 miles of cutting Germany in two at the waist.

The Ninth Army was assaulting Magdeburg. South of that city the Second Armored Division was driven back into the Elbe with heavy losses Saturday after being battered by the capital's leveled aircraft guns. White flags flew in Magdeburg after an all night bombardment.

The push toward Berlin opened from the second bridgehead at Barby, 15 miles southeast of Magdeburg. Closest American forces to the capital are those on the Elbe's west bank northeast of Magdeburg and 45 miles west of Berlin.

Junction Near in South

A German broadcast declared that an American junction with the Russian armies "is on the point of being realized" with the U. S. Third Army storming into the communications city of Chemnitz, 55 miles west of the enemy's big East Front base of Dresden.

The U. S. First Army hammered up to the Mulde River north of Chemnitz and 35 miles west of Dresden. On its north flank it reached the Mulde near Dessau, close to its junction with the Elbe River 54 miles southwest of Berlin.

The Ninetieth Infantry of the Third Army battled five miles west of Hof, striving to cover the last 13 miles to the Czech border, cut Germany in half and leave only the circuitous roads of Czechoslovakia open for a German retreat to the Bavarian and Austrian Alps.

Already the last good road between north and south Germany was severed, and the Eleventh Armored Division captured the Wagner festival city of Bayreuth, first large locality to fall in the American drive into Bavaria.

Munich 124 Miles Off
There Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton's forces were 124 miles north of Munich, where Hitler launched the Nazi movement, and 173 miles from his mountain retreat at Berchtesgaden.

The United States Seventh Army drove southward to within 15 miles of the Nazi shrine city of Nuernberg, another Bavarian stronghold 40 miles southwest of Bayreuth.

The Seventh's Fourteenth Armored Division smashed 32 miles due east to Creussen, 7 miles southeast of fallen Bayreuth. It was 117 miles from Munich.

The United States First Army fought into Halle, a city of 250,000 at the northwestern gateway to besieged Leipzig, 16 miles southeast.

In the north, the Canadian First Army reached the North Sea in northern Holland in a swift dash that spelled a virtual end to that phase of the Lowland battle. But the British Second Army was held in check along its entire front menacing Bremen and Hamburg.

The Ruhr was cut into two small pockets by a junction of the United

War Sidelights

Nazi Poison Food, Leave It for Yanks

U. S. Seventh Army, Germany. April 15 (AP)—American troops in southern Germany were forbidden today to use captured German foodstuffs. It was officially reported the Germans either "are preparing or have prepared poisoned coffee, sugar, cigarettes and chocolate" to leave in their retreat.

Nazi Warn Diplomats

New York, April 15 (AP)—The Allied radio at Rome said today that the German government has instructed its representatives in neutral countries to destroy "all confidential documents" in their possession by Saturday, April 21. The FCC recorded the broadcast.

Amen! Amen!

An American Division Command Post Luzon (Delayed) (AP)—A Japanese soldier who surrendered recently to Maj. James A. Moore of Kansas City, Mo., sure was fed up with bushido—the Nippon warrior code. As he approached the major mowing a surrender leaflet he shouted, "Japan phooey! Japan phooey!"

Another Jap Atrocity

An American Division Command Post Luzon (Delayed) (AP)—The unpopularity of the Japanese among Yank doughboys of the Twenty-fifth Division has reached a new high. The Yanks are quite sure. Nipponese artillery scored a direct hit on their cache of beer in the rugged Balet Pass sector. A nearby ammunition dump and a supply of soft drinks were undamaged.

FOLLIARD

yard of the concentration camp—the bodies of 33 foreign workers who had been slaughtered by SS guards a few hours before American troops would have liberated them. They lay just where they were shot, and at first glance appeared to be a collection of department store dummies. This was because of their waxen appearance, their stiffness and the way they were sprawled on the ground. A soldier of one of Patton's Infantry divisions, a fine, clean cut youngster, looked on the spectacle and murmured, "Good Lord." After a moment of silence, he said something about a thing like this being hard to believe when you read about it. Then he added: "But there it is." The poor wretches lying in the sun were terribly thin. Their wrists were like the wrists of little girls and their legs like broomsticks. They had been starved almost unto death and were too weak to march away with the other slaves when the Yanks were approaching Ohrdruf.

Story Recounted

Some of the dead slaves wore zebra-striped prison jackets and some lacked them because Germany had been running out of prison garb as well as tanks and munitions. It was hard to tell what nationality they were, but apparently most were Russians and Poles.

The story of what happened in the German abattoir must be told by how: How the Americans arrived and discovered the bodies in the camp yard; how Lieut. Ernest R. Sasser, the Military Government officer, took Albert Schneider, the mayor of Ohrdruf, to the scene; and how that night the mayor and his wife committed suicide.

The Reason? Hitler's SS

All that had been told when I arrived here from Frankfurt. The part that remained unexplained was why the camp commander, with the war coming to an end, should go around among 33 half dead slaves firing bullets into their heads.

I asked Stanislaw Suminski about it. He was one of the Polish slaves who escaped. Through a GI interpreter, Suminski explained that the SS boss was waiting for a truck to arrive and take the sick men away. When it failed to arrive, he became impatient and so whipped out his automatic and did away with them.

Yes, but why didn't the commander leave them there and impose the burden of their care on the Americans? I put it that way to the Pole even though I knew it would seem dumb.

The Pole shrugged and said the only answer was that it was the SS. They were Hitler's elite soldiers—Torture and wanton killings was routine with them. It has been said that Hitler turned the clock back here, in these Thuringian hills, that seems a libel on the past.

Hagerstown Yank Home on Leave; Wounded in Italy

Hagerstown, Md., April 15 (AP)—Pfc. Frank Kroeger, Jr., of Hagerstown, veteran of the Italian campaign, is home for 30 days. Once reported miss in action and on another occasion forced to lie for hours, wounded, under Nazi scrutiny, he has been receiving treatment at Finley General Hospital for a leg condition brought on by battle strains.

East-West Link By Allies Near, Berlin Admits

London, April 15 (AP)—The Berlin radio said today that the Allied "aim to link up with the Russians" on the point of being realized but declared the German high command was "doing everything in its power to prevent . . . or at least delay this achievement as long as possible."

Swedish dispatches from Berlin to Stockholm said that Germany now was split in two administratively and hinted that the actual physical division of the Reich was a matter of days.

The German-controlled Scandinavian Telegraph Bureau said the Nazis were throwing all their elite forces east of Berlin in an attempt to halt the Russians. The agency said that "if one can speak of tips, the race for Berlin should be slightly in the American's favor."

Ivar Westerlund, only Swedish correspondent left in Berlin, wrote in the Stockholm Dagens Nyheter that "the greatest military resistance can be reckoned to come from southern Germany which perhaps will serve as the central administration."

Since the order to evacuate Berlin, he said, "hardly half of the ministries and officials still remain in Berlin. All others have evacuated southward."

The British radio said the German command in the west had been split by the Allied drive and that Field Marshal Ernst Busch had taken over command in the north with Field Marshal Albert Kesselring leading the troops in central and southern Germany.

SECURITY

ous Russian decision naming Andrei to the United States as head of Russia's San Francisco delegation, has been a source of concern and disappointment in this country, particularly in view of the fact that the United States, Great Britain and China, the three other sponsoring powers, were sending their foreign affairs chiefs.

Action Urged on Roosevelt

It is known that President Roosevelt was urged by some of his advisers to ask Marshal Stalin to withdraw his request for Assembly seats for White Russia and the Ukraine Soviet, to avoid creating a public reaction in the United States that might impair or destroy American faith in the proposed world organization.

Whether President Roosevelt followed this suggestion is not known, but it was regarded as entirely probable here that President Truman invited Molotov to stop in Washington as a means of getting an opportunity to discuss this matter with him. The White House announcement that Stalin had accepted Truman's invitation did not say whether Molotov would visit Washington before or after the San Francisco Conference, which is scheduled to start on April 25, but it was generally expected that the visit would precede the Conference.

Stalin did not ask for the additional seats at Yalta on the grounds that he wanted to increase Russian voting power in the Assembly. It is reliably reported that Stalin acknowledged that the Assembly can exercise only moral suasion. Stalin is said to have argued that White Russia and the Ukraine were entitled to separate memberships in the proposed world organization primarily in recognition of the extent to which they have contributed to the combined war effort. No other areas of the world suffered as much devastation, he is said to have asserted.

If Truman does propose to Molotov that the request for additional seats be withdrawn it would probably be on the basis of asking Stalin to weigh the value of the votes to him against the probable cost of the request to the proposed world organization in loss of support by American public sentiment.

Encouragement that such an approach may succeed rests largely on the speed with which Stalin accepted Truman's request to send Molotov. That request, as revealed by the White House, pointed to its importance to American opinion.

The announcement said that Truman requested Ambassador Harriman to assure Stalin "that the coming of Foreign Secretary Molotov to the conference at San Francisco would be welcomed as an expression of earnest cooperation in carrying forward plans for formulating the new international organization as laid down by President Roosevelt and confirmed by the Yalta conference."

It was also held likely that this country will now intensify its efforts to get a new Polish government acceptable to Britain and the U. S. as well as Russia, created before the San Francisco Conference. No Polish government has been invited to attend the parley because of the inability of the Big Three to agree on the makeup of a new government along lines laid down at Yalta.

Byrnes conferred with Truman Friday and accompanied the new President to Hyde Park for the Roosevelt funeral, although he had insisted to reporters that he is acting only as "private citizen James F. Byrnes," speculation is strong here that he will eventually wind up with a top post in the Truman Administration, possibly as Secretary of State.

Md. Trout Season Opens

Baltimore, April 15 (AP)—Trout season in Maryland opened today. Frank Benz of the State Game and Inland Fish Commission said that State hatcheries now have about 40,000 trout, which along with the 40,000 given by the Federal hatcheries and distributed last fall, should insure excellent sport for fishermen.

Yanks Recross Elbe

DRIVE TOWARD DRESDEN—Allied troops (arrows) continued drives yesterday toward a junction with Russian forces. A German counterattack eliminated the American bridgehead over the Elbe River in the Magdeburg area, but units of the same American outfit recrossed and helped to expand the bridgehead at Barby, south of Magdeburg. Another bridgehead was carved out southeast of Dessau across the Mulde River. The Mulde was bridged at least two points west of Chemnitz. Bayreuth fell and troops were within 18 miles of Nuernberg.

States First and Ninth Armies, whose successes were increasing the estimates of the number of German troops trapped there.

It had been estimated that 150,000 enemy soldiers were cut off in the Ruhr, but 143,349 prisoners already have been removed from the pocket and more were streaming in.

There were few details of Lieut. Gen. William H. Simpson's reversal on the Elbe, but the loss of the Ninth Army crossing presented the Allies with the stark realization that the last lap to Berlin may be a hard one.

A United Press dispatch from the Ninth Army sector reported: "Infantrymen of the Second Armored who crossed late Thursday held their trans-Elbe bridgehead alone for nearly 48 hours. The Germans hit them with shellfire, mortar bombs, tanks, the bombs and gunfire of planes, and counterattacks of strength up to a battalion, possibly 800 men."

"Enemy artillery, blasting away with the same clear field of fire they would have enjoyed in a shooting gallery, repeatedly knocked out engineers' attempts to build a bridge which would have enabled tanks to cross and help the infantry."

"Lacking air support, fighting on two 'K' rations apiece for 2 days, their ammunition running low, the armored infantry finally drew back. Toward the end, they had only bazookas to fight off the attacks of German tanks."—Editor's note.

Losses Are Heavy

British bombers sought to ease some of this pressure Saturday night with a heavy attack on the western suburb of Potsdam, which is an important communications center only 45 miles in front of other U. S. Ninth Army troops on the Elbe northeast of Magdeburg.

Losses at the bridgehead were reported heavy, with some American soldiers swimming the river to escape.

The Eighty-third Infantry Division was reported officially to be expanding its Barby bridgehead as more and more Ninth Army units closed up to the Elbe.

The Fifth Armored Division fanned out along a 12-mile stretch of the Elbe's west bank in the area of Seehausen, 50 miles north of Magdeburg. Infantry on the flanks reached the city of Salzwedel, 28 miles west of Seehausen, and cleared Bismarck, southeast of Seehausen. It was the Ninth Army's Seventy-ninth Division which met the First Army's Eighth Infantry Division at Wetzlar, on the Ruhr River 8 miles south of the fallen arsenal city of Dortmund. This cut the Ruhr into two pockets, one on the west 15 miles deep and 30 miles wide, and one on the east, 10 by 15 miles.

Two armored divisions of Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton's Third Army were driving east with possibly 85 miles of the Russian lines. The Sixth Armored Division, which ran into strong resistance, forced a crossing of the Mulde River north of Chemnitz and apparently close to where the river was reached by the First Army's Ninth Armored Division after a 16-mile dash.

When last heard from, the Fourth Armored Division, first to hurdle the Mulde, was running into only scattered resistance as it closed on Chemnitz.

Trucks still carried the main burden of feeding the swiftly-moving columns, but the Third Army announced the completion of a railway bridge across the Rhine in less than 10 days, which should speed the supply problem. The structure was dedicated as the Franklin D. Roosevelt Memorial Bridge.

Bayreuth Bombed

Bayreuth, Wagnerian city of 37,000, was given a brief ordeal of fire before it was captured by the Eleventh Armored Division.

The Germans rejected an ultimatum to surrender, whereupon American guns opened up, fighter-bombers snarled down, and the Yanks charged into the city.

Northeast of Bayreuth the Third Army was moving up to the Czech border on a broad front.

The Ninetieth Infantry Division captured Schelgel, 5 miles west of Hof and 13 miles from Czechoslovakia. The Seventy-first Division crossed the already-severed Munich-Berlin superhighway 7 miles north of Bayreuth where they were about 20 miles from the border.

As the Eleventh Armored Division drove beyond Bayreuth, the Seventy-first moved in and occupied the city.

Lieut. Gen. Courtney H. Hodges' First Army closed up to the Mulde of the largest ever sent against Japan. Today's was another incendiary bomb attack, calculated to sweep entire areas with unquenchable fires in a systematic continuation of the destruction of Japanese war industry.

First reports said only that im-western Breslau and referred to the "closing phase" of the battle—indicating that the German hold-out garrison in the lower Silesian capital was near the end of its resources.

St. Poelten, strategic 10-way road and rail center 25 miles west of liberated Vienna, fell to Marshal Fedor I. Tolbukhin's Third Ukrainian Army. Here Tolbukhin's forces were 61 miles east of the big Austrian city of Linz, 126 miles from Berchtesgaden and 86 miles from the frontier of the Nazi Bavarian mountain redoubt.

While these forces gained along the Danube's south bank, Mogow announced the capture of Floridsdorf, an industrial suburb of Vienna on the north bank of the Danube, which actually is included in the city boundaries.

French Moving Fast

The French First Army, which on its front west of the Seventh Army covered one third of the distance between Karlsruhe and the Swiss border in two days, drove 10 miles east of captured Kehl and seized Trenchen.

French troops driving 6 miles south of Kehl, which is across the Rhine from Strasbourg, were about 60 miles from the Swiss border.

On the northern end of the front, Gen. H. D. G. Crerar's Canadian First Army forces reached the North Sea northwest of Groningen after a sweeping advance of possibly 35 miles.

Practically all Holland east of the Zuider Zee has been liberated, but the Germans were fighting hard in Groningen, where the Canadians attacked and reached the center of the city.

Farther south the Canadians also were fighting in the center of Apeldoorn after crossing the canal of the same name. Apeldoorn was being made a pivot while the Germans were withdrawing to the old Dutch defense lines 20 miles farther west.

The strongholds of Zwolle and Meppel on the Zuider Zee front finally were cleared.

"Thirty good years, Mother"

That star represents twenty-five years of service, the bar another five . . . altogether, thirty years that Jim has been working on the Southern Railway System.

"Thirty good years," Jim says.

Because in the years since 1915 he has seen his Southland lay the foundations for a rich, full, abundant economy.

He has seen agriculture, industry, mining and commerce team up with his own Southern Railway System to get things done.

And when war came, he was part of the Southern team that broke all records in moving men and materials swiftly and surely on their way to the fighting fronts.

Jim's proud of his thirty years. So are we. But Jim knows that even greater accomplishments are still to come.

And we share his faith in a great future for the postwar South . . . for we know that the next thirty years will be good years, too.

Help Shortage Forces Rise in Entrance Pay

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION will upgrade its grade-3, $1440 clerks and typists. The good ones. It has become increasingly difficult to hire $1440 people for any work and the agency, like many others here, has been forced to raise the entrance level. This was done long ago in War, Navy, and many of the war agencies.

KLUTZ In recent months, Veterans' has been put into the position of hiring new people at $1620, higher salaries than those received by some employees already on the job. Now that problem will be corrected. Furthermore, the promotion policy of the agency is to be altered. For years the agency has made promotions on an agency basis, that is, every eligible employee in the agency was considered for a promotion across office and bureau lines. Transfers were many between offices.

Under the new policy, promotions will be confined largely within the several different services. For example, employees within the insurance division will be promoted within that division. No one would be brought in from the construction division except in rare cases.

STORY: When James F. Byrnes resigned as director of the Office of War Relocation and Reconstruction, he told this story to explain his reasons: An old farmer down in South Carolina hired a new hand. He didn't know anything about him, so the first day he ordered him to dig 100 potatoes. The helper returned at 4 o'clock to report the work was done, the fencing was up. The pleased farmer the following day gave him a job which he figured would take two days, plowing a field. But in the mid-afternoon of the same day the hired hand had finished it. The farmer told him: "You've worked mighty hard these past two days and tomorrow I'm going to give you an easy job—I call it spitting work."

So, the following morning the farmer took the man down into his basement and showed him a large pile of potatoes. "I want you," he said, "to sort these potatoes. Knock off the sprouts of the sound potatoes and put 'em in this pile for us to eat. Put the others in a pile over here and we'll plant 'em." A couple of hours later the farmer heard a thud in his basement. He rushed down to find the hired man stretched out on the floor in a faint. He revived him. "You've been a good worker," the farmer told him, "and I thought you'd be glad to get this day off from the strenuous work. Tell me, don't you like this work?" The helper thought for a moment and answered: "It's not the work; it's the damn decisions I must make that's killing me." P. S. It now appears that Byrnes will soon be back in Government, sorting potatoes and making decisions again.

DIARY NOTES: The meat supply of the Welfare and Recreation Association, operators of Government cafeterias, is at an all-time low. The agency has meat on hand for Monday's lunch and dinner. That's all. It has meat on order for Wednesday and Saturday, but there is no assurance it will arrive. Next week may be meatless in Government cafeterias. . . . WPA has agreed to consolidate as many of its activities as possible within the Social Security Building and release space in outlying buildings. A major post-war agency has put in a bid for the Social Security Building. Somewhat doubtful is the renomination of David Lillenthal, as chairman of Tennessee Valley Authority. Lillenthal's appointment expires next month and President Roosevelt was ready to reappoint him. However, President Truman is expected to give added consideration to the objections of Senator McKellar, who is President of the Senate.

TONGUE TWISTER: Limitation order L-334 issued the other day by the War Production Board reads in part: "(a) What the order does. This order forbids every person except concentrators of picker stick blanks, exporters of picker stick blanks, and manufacturers of picker sticks from accepting delivery of picker stick blanks. It also forbids a manufacturer of picker sticks from using picker stick blanks in the manufacture of picker sticks."

MORE NOTES: President Truman has told callers that he'll wear the same suit as President as he wore when he was just plain Harry S. Truman of Independence, Missouri. . . . Occupational ailments among Federal workers are heart disease, lung trouble, bone afflictions, lung trouble, indigestion, and eye disease. Employees were retired on disability from the Government last year for the reasons listed above in that order. . . . The story here yesterday on a proposed memorial to Franklin Delano Roosevelt has brought forth many suggestions. If you have an idea, send it in. The whole thing is just an idea at this stage.

Picks Right Store Duluth, Minn. (U.P.)—Don Ehlers, proprietor of a foot comfort shop here, was cleaning up one night recently when he heard a scratching on the front door. He opened the door and a lame pheasant walked in. The bird was turned over to the zoo.

Honor Roosevelt Memorial Blood Gifts Suggested

Baltimore, April 15 (AP)—Red Cross blood donors may designate their contributions to a memorial to the late President Roosevelt, beginning tomorrow, Mrs. Stanford Rathchild, chairman of enrollment, announced.

"I am sure that President Roosevelt would be happy to know that blood donations to give life and stimulation to our fighting men should be made in his name," she said.

After a lag in contributions, Baltimore last week exceeded its 2250-pint quota by 175 pints.

Mrs. Rathchild reiterated the great need for Type O blood, which can be transported in whole form for immediate use of wounded on the battlefronts.

Sergeant Wood is on military leave from the university horticultural department.

Hatching Eggs May Be Sent Abroad by Air

Baltimore, April 15 (AP)—University of Maryland authorities said today that hatching eggs, sped overseas in cargo planes, may help ravaged countries of Europe to rebuild their poultry industries after the war.

They based this belief on tests, conducted the past year, indicating that if hatching eggs are carefully handled in transit, high altitudes and rapid changes in temperature do not harm their incubating qualities.

Preliminary tests undertaken by Dr. Morley A. Jull, head of the University's poultry department, were so encouraging that the agricultural research administration of the United States Department of Agriculture and the University of Maryland cooperated in dispatching test shipments from this country to South America.

"The results of these tests make it quite evident that airline shipments of eggs can be made to Europe without diminishing hatchability," Dr. Jull said.

Representatives of the Soviet Union are said by Dr. Jull to be seeking a supply of several thousand turkey and chicken eggs for shipment from the west coast.

Harpers Ferry, Bolivar, W. Va., Discuss Merger

Harpers Ferry, W. Va., April 15. At a special meeting of the two councils of these adjoining twin towns, Mayor Robert Fields of Bolivar discussed the matter of uniting the two municipalities as one, subject to the approval of the residents.

A majority of both councils being in favor of such action, it was decided to compose handbills for distribution, and a committee of four, composed of both mayors and both recorders, was appointed to do this work. At a joint meeting of the councils on April 20, these will be examined and approved by the two bodies. June 5 was set as the date for the election.

Mayor Fields went on record as declining to run on any ticket but that of consolidation. After serving as mayor of the village of approximately 700 for the past six years, he sees little in the way of accomplishment to show for his labors, and less prospect for the future. His duties, he said, range from the ridiculous to the sublime, as the sole law-enforcing representative of his community. Being routed from his bed in the wee hours of the night to escort common "drunks" off the public thoroughfare, settling petty disputes, directing traffic, polling dance and beer halls, etc., all add up to the duties of a police officer, he claims.

Mayor L. D. Nichols of Harpers Ferry was in full accord. Both men point out that consolidation of the corporations would permit the employment of adequate police protection, as well as other improvements too expensive for the separate councils to maintain.

Mayor Fields, who has borne a major share of his corporation's affairs almost single-handedly for many years, has revived the subject of consolidation after much deliberation and testing of public opinion.

Truman Didn't Seek Presidency--It Came

Modest Man's Rise Marked by Nominations
Accorded Him When He Sought Lesser Offices

(First of Five Articles.)
By James D. White
Associated Press Staff Writer

There is nothing in the record, and as a man who was mighty handy to have on a committee that had a lot of work to do.

He didn't even want to be Vice President. He said so.

Eleven years ago the man today assigned by fate to the world's most complex job was knocking about in Jackson County, Mo., politics.

He had become a county judge in 1922 with the support of the Tom Pendergast political machine, which ran Kansas City and the county. He was defeated for reelection in 1924 but was elected in 1926 as presiding judge and was reelected.

Wanted to Be Governor
Before the 1932 primary election Mr. Truman decided he would like to be Governor of the State. Despite support by friends in southwest Missouri he didn't even get his name on the party ticket.

But that year Tom Pendergast had tried to elect a certain man Senator from Missouri. The man was defeated, and Pendergast vowed—"as a point of pride"—to recoup the loss in 1934. He persuaded Mr. Truman to run for Senator from Missouri. The man who was to become President was thinking at the time of running for a seat in the House of Representatives, but he ran for Senator and won.

Arriving in Washington under something of a Pendergast pall, the light, modest freshman made few speeches and spent a lot of time in the Congressional Library. He hewed consistently to the New Deal line and became known as one who didn't stop working just because the clock said it was 5:30, and as a man who was mighty handy to have on a committee that had a lot of work to do.

Stood by Pendergast

Toward the end of his first term the Pendergast machine was broken up in Kansas City and Mr. Truman's earlier connection with it was dragged out and thoroughly aired. He stood his ground.

"Pendergast has been a good friend to me when I needed it," he said, in his quiet, rather high-pitched voice. "I am not one to desert a sinking ship when it starts down."

With a solid record in the Senate and an easy way of making friends, Mr. Truman weathered this storm and was reelected in 1940. America already was building ships, making guns and expanding its Army and Navy because of the war in Europe. Mr. Truman remembered the waste of World War I and the rearmament that followed. He said:

Wanted Graft Doors Shut

"Let's not wait and have a lot of dead horses to dig up later, as was done after the last war. Let's dig these things up now and correct them." So the Senate Special Committee for the Investigation of the National Defense Program was created, and Mr. Truman was named chairman.

The Truman Committee poked its nose into everything that concerned the running of the war, looking for inefficiency, graft, waste. When it found these things it said so. It received hundreds of letters daily from citizens, became a kind of national forum that kept the whole war effort in the glare of public debate. The name Truman became a household word.

Reluctant Nominee

In the summer of 1944, when President Roosevelt decided to run for a fourth term, the Democratic Party picked Mr. Truman as its candidate for Vice President. This was partly through a process of elimination—such better-known figures as Henry A. Wallace having various political drawbacks—and partly because President Roosevelt nodded favorably in Mr. Truman's direction when his name was suggested.

"I do not want the Vice Presidency," Mr. Truman said in Kansas City just before the convention. "... It is my personal preference and desire to remain in the Senate."

But he was nominated and elected.

When a reporter reminded him a few weeks ago that fate might some day put him in the White House, he replied with his ready grin:

"Don't say that—I don't let myself think of it."

(Tomorrow: He Has to Be Shown.)

ROOSEVELT

monies were President Truman, Mrs. Truman and their daughter, Mary Margaret, and James F. Byrnes, former "Assistant President."

The 75-year-old rector, a slight figure, followed the burial ritual in the Episcopal prayer book and read a hymn which began: "Now the labourer's task is o'er; now the battle day is past." Three times he intoned the stanzas ending with: "Father, into Thy gracious keeping leave we now Thy servant sleeping."

West Point cadets fired three volleys over the grave, with Fala barking in loud concern each time. A burglar vaulted into the cement-lined vault sunk into the spot which President Roosevelt selected several years ago as his final resting place among the 1100 Hyde Park acres which he loved and which he willed shall go to the Nation upon the death of his children.

Services inside the garden lasted only 20 minutes. The pallbearers folded the flag which had draped the casket on its journey northward from Warm Springs, Ga., and gave it to Mrs. Roosevelt, who was dressed in stark black and showed the strain of the past few days. Although she wore a hat with a widow's veil, she never covered her face, but sat Spartanlike with dry eyes throughout the ceremony.

After the garden was emptied of guests she returned briefly from the house to look at the sealed casket before driving to the train which was to take her back to Washington, where she is to pack Roosevelt family belongings with the hope of moving out of the White House permanently by Thursday.

Chief Justice Harlan Fiske Stone and several other members of the Supreme Court were in the group which stood several deep on the east side of the garden during the services. On the front row stood General of the Army George C. Marshall, Army Chief of Staff between Admiral of the Fleet, Ernest J. King, Commander in Chief of the United States Fleet and Fleet Admiral William D. Leahy, the late President's chief of staff. Standing with them was Lieut. Gen. Bernard Giles, acting Chief of the U. S. Air Force, and near them was solemn-faced James A. Farley, the former Postmaster General, one of President Roosevelt's long-time political friends. Senate and House leaders from both parties dotted the group which stood on the garden's west side, while behind the flowers stood rows of Hyde Park villagers, among them Elmer Van Wagner, the town supervisor, and Moses Smith, who farms part of the Hyde Park estate. Soldiers, sailors, and Marines lined the 20-foot hedge and stood in rows along the graveled walks which led past clumps of peonies and rows of jonquils and pansies. Several soldiers watched the services from the loft of the nearby stables and others stood with West Point cadets and sailors to form the solid lines of honor guards from the railroad siding to the garden hedge.

RATION BOARD

They Listen...To Help Win the War

Folks on rationing boards have listened and listened and listened... Junior uses up all of the family shoe stamps... Somebody's oil burner is covered with icicles... Somebody's share-rider moved away. Yes, they've listened with patience and tried to be fair... to be more than helpful when a genuine case of hardship was brought to their attention.

In teaching us what we can do without, rationing has given us a new appreciation of our country's peacetime abundance. It has taught us more. We have learned lessons in self-denial and the value of cooperation... lessons that bolster our determination to carry on till final victory is won.

Young and old, we are getting matchless training in early American fortitude and self-reliance. Surely the people of our country will be ready to meet the problems of tomorrow with confidence.

What ration points bring to our tables today would have seemed like banquets to generations of our forefathers—but you have Budweiser, too, to make simple wartime meals taste better.

The six great states served by Kansas City Southern Lines hold the "balance of power" that is winning the war. For they produce more than one-half of the world's petroleum—"key to war and peace!" With victory, the myriad and useful organic compounds created by the resourceful petroleum industry will find new and rapid peacetime applications. "He couldn't have looked better. He had on a dark gray suit and because I had asked that there be something red in the portrait, he wore a Harvard red tie. It had to be right to blend with his navy cape which was to be one feature of the portrait.

"The room was filled with papers. Mr. Hassett (the President's secretary) was with the President. The papers were all over the dining table and the chairs. I understand you cannot blot the signature of the President. It has to dry. They were all drying there. Mr. Hassett said: 'I'm waiting for my laundry to dry.' The President burst out laughing. There was general amusement.

Wellington, N. Z., April 15 (AP).—Memorial services for President Roosevelt were held in churches throughout New Zealand today.

The country will observe two minutes of silence at 11 a. m. Monday in honor of the memory of the late Chief Executive of the United States.

Jerusalem, April 15 (AP).—Special services honoring Franklin D. Roosevelt were held today in Jerusalem and Tel Aviv.

Athens, April 15 (AP).—Memorial services for President Roosevelt were held today in the Athens Cathedral attended by Archbishop Damaskinos, Greek regent, Premier Admiral Nicholas Voulgaris and his entire cabinet. Resolutions expressing sorrow were adopted by hundreds of trade unions and other organizations. One said "Greece will never forget this sacred name which has been a living expression of liberty."

Educators to Open Maryland Parley At Towson July 2
Baltimore, April 15 (AP).—A lengthy conference of education officials to plan for activation of the five-point school program passed by the recent General Assembly will be held at Towson State Teachers' College this summer.

Dr. Thomas G. Pullen, Jr., superintendent of the State Department of Education, announced today the meetings would begin July 2 and run three weeks.

The program will establish a 12-year system of public education throughout Maryland and develop adult education, vocational rehabilitation and other courses.

"The purpose of the meeting," Dr. Pullen said, "is to put the new program into effect as rapidly as possible and to develop a unified system of operation in the county schools.

Major problems involved, he said, were construction of additional school buildings and hiring of more teachers.

Ten counties received bond issue authorization for new buildings to cost about five million dollars.

About 400 additional teachers will be needed.

Sad Neighbors Of Roosevelts At Graveside

By D. Harold Oliver

Hyde Park, N. Y., April 15 (AP). The neighbors who knew Franklin D. Roosevelt as village resident, farmer and timber grower mourned with the family and highest ranking civilian and military officials of the United States at his flower-banked graveside today.

During the impressive ceremony in the rose garden selected by the late President himself for his last resting place, the villagers and their families were stern-faced and grim in their reverence to an old and cherished friend.

Chose Site 5 Years Ago

Secretary William D. Hassett said Mr. Roosevelt told him five years ago he wanted to be buried in his favorite home garden. Hassett said the thirty-first President had repeated the same request to others.

At the grave were Elmer Van Wagoner, supervisor of the town of Hyde Park, and Mrs. Van Wagoner. Both had known Mr. Roosevelt for years.

Moses Smith, who rented a Roosevelt farm for nearly 30 years, came with his family. Smith had talked down to earth with the World War leader perhaps as no other man in the town, planning the laying out of new acres, spring plantings, truck gardening. He had introduced Mr. Roosevelt at homecomings from his election victories.

Farm Supervisor Mourns
Will Barrett, who runs the Roosevelt farm, and William Plough and his wife were there, standing with bowed heads. Plough is superintendent of the estate and lives in a small house overlooking the Hudson which Mr. Roosevelt had sailed as a boy of 11. He is overseer of the family lands on both sides of the Albany Post Road, including the nursery where Mr. Roosevelt grew thousands of Christmas trees each year.

Others present who had known Mr. Roosevelt before he became President included Celia Zepf, whose father owns much property in the village; Fred Traudt, former Republican postmaster of Hyde Park, and Arthur Smith, son of the tenant Moses and now the Democratic postmaster.

Many workers on the estate and those adjoining bowed their heads with the new President of the United States, members of the Supreme Court, Cabinet, Legislators and top military leaders.

It was a sad group of neighbors and workers who walked out of the burial garden after taps sounded.

Gestapo Staff Fled 3 Days Ahead of Yanks

Frankenhausen, Germany, April 15 (AP).—American soldiers captured a temporary headquarters of the staff of Gestapo Chief Heinrich Himmler today, three days after the Nazis had fled in such haste that many did not inform their wives and mistresses.

Records were destroyed or carted off to Munich two days before the entry of the Ninth Armored Division into this spa 27 miles north of Erfurt.

"They spent two days burning records and files," said a lieutenant who questioned the fearful, frightened women left behind, some of them with six or seven children.

Himmler sent his staff from Berlin December 2 because of bombings and the approach of the Russians. They came to Frankenhausen and requisitioned a children's home, giving two to three hundred children, many of them ill, just 24 hours to move out.

"The children had no place to go and could not be returned to their families, so the head nurse distributed them among the townspeople," the lieutenant said. The head nurse said she had nursed Maj. Gen. Terry Allen's baby during the American occupation after the last war and knew she would not be harmed if she stayed behind.

Himmler himself never visited the headquarters here, but he kept in constant telephone communication, calling two or three times daily.

"Guess I've just naturally been counting on a new car as soon as victory rolls around."

AN IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT TO CIGARETTE SMOKERS

THIS SUMMER for the first time since the beginning of the war, Old Golds will again have the special protection of aluminum foil.

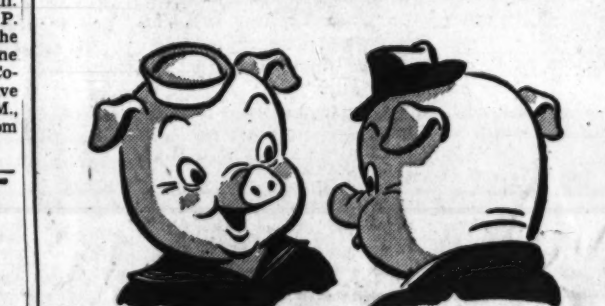

Aluminum foil is all the more important now because—due to wartime restrictions—there is not enough Cellophane for year-round packaging use.

"Thus, we are removing Old Gold's Cellophane wrapper for the summer months... so that we may use it again for the winter months when it is the most effective protection against the artificial, indoor heat that tends to dry out tobacco.

Distribution of our aluminum-foil packages is just about complete, and soon all Old Golds will come to you in this fully protected package.

ALL THIS..and EXTRA RED POINTS TOO!

PORKY: You dope, why didn't you get into the Navy and see the world like me? In 3 weeks, I'll be served up in the South Pacific, ready to put the fight into one of our sailor boys!

FATTY: Okay, Bud, maybe I am going to pop up on a civilian's plate right here in the U.S.A., but when the fat that comes out of me in cooking is turned in by the lady to her butcher...look what happens.

FATTY: For example, the used fat Mrs. America is saving from chops like me helps make lubricants for bombers over Tokyo, and rocket bombs and parachutes. Our country needs tons and tons of used fat!

FATTY: Fats are also used to make the millions of bars of soap our fighting men need to help keep clean. Each man gets 15 bars a month. To make just 6 bars takes 1 pound of fats.

FATTY: For hundreds of other essentials, too...for fabrics, paints, civilian soaps, synthetic rubber and explosives our country needs used fats! Every drop should be saved; each pound turned in gives housewives 2 extra red points and 4 cents!

PORKY: Sure looks like the home front can have its chop and eat it too! This message has been approved by WFA and OPA and paid for by Industry.

We Must Save More Used Fats!

In any way. The purpose of the amendment is to provide that the President may not after the end of the war continue to carry out any longer a contract for the delivery of stuff which was previously contracted for. If further deliveries are considered desirable, the Senator thinks that they should be financed as part of a postwar lending or general aid program.

The agreement with the French government is, of course, water over the dam, and in view of France's great need, we are frankly glad the loan was made. But it was undoubtedly a departure from the original intent of lend-lease. Senator Taft's amendment was primarily designed to prevent a repetition of similar irregularities. We are sorry the Senate did not approve it.

World Law

It is natural, when we think about machinery to prevent war, that emphasis should be laid first on force. Force has been used to upset the peace of the world. Only by marshalling superior force have the United Nations been able to put down the ruthless aggression of lawless governments. Yet continued use of this force without the guidance of principles and international law would lead to tyranny and further war. We are always pleased, therefore, to see the task of peacemaking linked to the revival and strengthening of international law.

The place of law in the world order now taking shape was admirably described by Justice Robert H. Jackson of the Supreme Court in an address last week before the American Society of International Law. The justice quoted approvingly Woodrow Wilson's prophetic words to the International Law Society in Paris in 1919: "You cannot in human experience rush into the light. You have to go through the twilight into the broadening day before the noon comes and the full sun is on the landscape." The development of law is a long-range proposition. Yet the current situation undoubtedly affords an opportunity, as Justice Jackson noted, "to bring international law out of the closet where President Wilson found it and impress it upon the consciousness of the people."

It is a mistake to assume, Justice Jackson tells us, that international law is without force because it may not readily translate into a court order with an executive power to enforce it. "Twice Germany has demonstrated that flagrant disregard of international law will call into being an ad hoc force for its vindication." The objective to be sought is a set of international rules by which most of the disputes which endanger the peace may be settled before there is resort to bloodletting.

Probably the most important part of Justice Jackson's message, however, is his warning that international courts, if they are to win the confidence of the people and become a useful part of our peace machinery, must adhere to the judicial concept. All our enemies and some of our allies, he points out, "think of courts as dependent and controlled arms of the policy-making part of government. . . . Even among us, he finds, "there are some who candidly would use courts as an instrument of power and many more who favor all of the premises of that philosophy without recognizing its conclusions."

International courts of this sort would serve chiefly to discredit the judicial process in the eyes of the people. We think it is eminently clear that the International Court of Justice should be above obligation to any nation or interest. Neither the United States or any other nation not in control of the court would wish to submit disputes to a tribunal owing no duty "to truth in fact-finding" or "to the science of law in decision." Self-respecting judges, as Justice Jackson points out, would not serve on such a court.

If the international court is not to be an instrument of policy, moreover, it should not be asked to pass upon questions of policy. Its jurisdiction should be confined, as the Informal Inter-Allied Committee urged, to matters which are really "justiciable." Justice Jackson is thoroughly convinced also that "we must not use the forms of judicial proceedings to carry out or nationalize previously settled political or military policy." If war criminals are to be dealt with as a matter of high United Nations policy, there should be no pretense of submitting their cases to courts. If, on the other hand, they are to be judicially tried, the proceedings should be an honest search for facts; the defendants should be given ample opportunity to assemble and present evidence in their defense; and the courts should be prepared to release them if they should not be proved guilty.

The Anglo-American concept of law and justice is far too important to world peace and stability to be mocked by farcical trials for any purpose. Indeed the hope of substituting orderly adjustment of disputes for war rests in large measure upon the extension of this concept into international relations. No international court can be expected to make the right decision in every case. "But the worst settlement of international disputes by adjudication or arbitration," as Justice Jackson said, "is likely to be less disastrous to the loser and certainly less destructive to the world than no way of settlement except war."

Psychological War

Japanese civilians, and even soldiers, respond to ideas, it seems, in very natural, human ways. They fear death and seek to avoid it, despite the notion so prevalent among us that they are all guided by a blind fatalism and fanaticism. They care about freedom, peace and security. They love their land, much as we love ours, and hope for its improvement. These findings may be upsetting to Mr. Paul McNutt whose simple solution for the Japanese problem is to exterminate the Japanese people in toto. Nevertheless, the Office of War Information and the Army have found a recognition of such facts to be useful in directing propaganda toward Japan.

In the China and Burma war theaters, according to OWI officials, the dropping of "surrender passes" has had surprisingly effective results. These passes promise the Japanese honorable surrender, decent treatment and good food. Hesitatingly at first but latterly in greater numbers, the Japanese have been making use of these passes to come into American prisoner cages. OWI's psychological warfare scored one notable triumph over Japanese propaganda on Okinawa. Despite the Japanese warnings to civilians there that the Americans would torture and kill all who gave themselves up, the Saipan pattern of mass suicide was not followed. Instead, there were mass surrenders.

The "surrender pass" campaign is to be greatly expanded. In addition, three powerful radio transmitters are to be installed in Manila to beam broadcasts to the Japanese on their home islands. It is altogether possible that such measures will help to shorten the war against Japan, will hasten Japanese surrender and save the lives of American men. These efforts will not be advanced, however, by Mr. McNutt's recent effusion. It is as fatuous as it is barbaric to speak of exterminating a whole people.

Lack Of Teamwork

Another instance of inexcusable lack of teamwork in government has been brought to light by the testimony of J. T. Kennedy, superintendent of weights and measures of the District government. Mr. Kennedy told the Senate Food Investigating Committee that buyers for the Department of Weights and Measures have to pay more than ceiling prices for meat in about 50 per cent of Washington's retail stores. Although he testified that some of the worst violators of price regulations have been turned over to OPA, he added that his department couldn't afford to transmit information often because OPA "drags our buyers into court, ringing their door bells late at night, and they refuse to buy for us any more."

This is a deplorable state of affairs. It seems all the worse in view of the fact that evidence needed to suppress illegal practices is actually in possession of municipal officials. Administrator Bowles has constantly stressed the magnitude of the enforcement task assigned OPA, and the inadequacy of its enforcement staff. It appears that the local OPA has only four investigators to check meat rationing and price violations. Therefore, OPA must depend upon the cooperation of District officials and District residents to provide much of the evidence on which to run down violators of price regulations.

We are not interested in trying to place the blame for lack of cooperation except to point out that teamwork between Federal and District officials is essential to suppress black market operations. For the Department of Weights and Measures to permit known violators of price regulations to go unpunished because of the bringing of them before the bar of justice might hamper its own activities is understandable. But it is a situation that cries aloud for correction. Consequently it is encouraging to hear that the District Commissioners, aroused by Mr. Kennedy's testimony, plan to participate more actively in the work of enforcing price regulations by seeing that violations brought to the attention of District officials are promptly reported to OPA.

Too Heavy A Burden

Since no provision is made in the Constitution for filling the now vacant office of Vice President, the duty of presiding regularly over the Senate falls to the lot of the Senator from Tennessee, Kenneth McKellar, as President pro tempore of the Senate. Ordinarily the President pro tempore, who is chosen by the Senate, presides only in the absence of the Vice President. Now the Senator from Tennessee will be called upon to take over indefinitely the duties of presiding officer, in addition to arduous and responsible tasks as acting chairman of the highly important Appropriations Committee and head of the Committee on Postoffice and Post Roads. And there are numerous other unavoidable demands on his time and energy that might be classified as general senatorial activities.

In view of the vigor and alertness of the 76-year-old Tennesseean, his age should not be cited as a decisive reason for objecting to this multiplication of offices and piling up of responsibilities. Indeed, long years in political office and familiarity with parliamentary procedure are valuable assets that, in Mr. McKellar's case, go far toward offsetting the purely physical handicap of advanced years. However, apart from considerations of age and experience, it seems clear that no man ought to be expected (or, for that matter, be allowed) to undertake so many important duties. As presiding officer of the Senate he would have a full-time job; indeed, any Senator who becomes a substitute for a nonexistent Vice President will find it difficult to keep abreast of even the routine duties of his elective office. If he is compelled in addition to preside over and direct the activities of one or more of the Senate's most important committees, he will almost certainly fall victim to overwork or else be compelled to rely upon others to relieve him.

In any case, the public interest is bound to suffer from concentrating too much power and responsibility in the hands of one man. For that reason we trust that Senator McKellar will realize the necessity of divesting himself of some of the burdens of multiple office, either by giving up his committee assignments or else by asking the Senate to name one of his colleagues as presiding officer.

A Retrospect

EVENTS DO NOT stand alone; each event is a part of others that have preceded it. This is always true, though not always recognized. The rule is strikingly proved today, by the change that now takes place in the Presidency of the United States.

The coming of Harry S. Truman to the Presidency is a part of, and was determined by, an event that took place last July. That prior event was in turn a double one. It consisted of the refusal, by the Democratic National Convention, to renominate Mr. Henry A. Wallace for the Vice Presidency; and the substitution of Mr. Harry S. Truman.

THAT PREGNANT change had future meaning. What it forecast was stated at the time in a dispatch printed in this column last July 23. Now that the future meaning has become present actuality, there are many evaluations of the completed consequences. Most of them are sound, but even the best are inevitably affected by the momentary excitement of the drama's climax. There may be some special merit in the judgment that was composed in the coolness of speculative anticipation nine months ago:

"Defeat of Henry A. Wallace for the Democratic Vice Presidential nomination was more than just the defeat of a candidate. It was more than an incident of one campaign year. It was the intervention of the New Deal as to speak, an ideological dynasty. This is by far the most important consequence of the Democratic National Convention. It is the sort of thing that makes history and sets a pattern of the future. "The purpose of those who fought fanatically for renomination of Mr. Wallace was realistic to a degree almost macabre. They assumed the possibility that President Roosevelt, if reelected, might not serve out his fourth term—and they wished to be sure that, if this should happen, they would have in the White House a man as sympathetic to them as Mr. Roosevelt, one who would perpetuate the New Deal. With Mr. Wallace as President, indeed, they would have more than merely perpetuation of the New Deal. They would have a President with a crusading temperament and a mind strongly bent toward intellectual adventure, to a degree sometimes startling. With such a man in the Presidency, there might be hope for almost any of the new ideologies of the groups who supported Mr. Wallace. . . . Mr. Wallace as President would be even more satisfactory to the left-wing groups than Mr. Roosevelt, for Mr. Roosevelt temporizes, while Mr. Wallace is a man of uncompromising zeal."

"Nomination of Mr. Wallace, followed by his elevation to the Presidency, would have affected the course of the country. And it would have definitely changed the nature of the Democratic Party, making it the vehicle of the left-wing and radical groups. "These consequences are now averted. . . . In the event of Mr. Roosevelt ceasing to be President, the New Deal as an ideological dynasty will end. "If the successful nominee for the Vice Presidency, Senator Harry S. Truman, should become President, he would be sympathetic to the New Deal, or most of it. But he would not be as sympathetic as Mr. Roosevelt, for in the Senate Mr. Truman has opposed some New Deal measures. Decidedly, Mr. Truman would not do what Mr. Wallace would—carry the New Deal farther distances into new fields. Senator Truman, because of his temperament and his record, would be far closer to the old-school Democrats than Mr. Wallace; and this disposition on his part would be increased by the fact that he got his nomination from the old-school Democrats—got it as the old-school Democrats' alternative to Mr. Wallace. The old-school Democrats can now feel confidence that upon Mr. Roosevelt leaving the White House the New Deal as a political dynasty will be terminated."

THAT JUDGMENT, which was printed in July, is supplemented by one printed October 29, and having since, been composed in the detachment of anticipation: "Just what effects would follow if Vice Presidential Candidate Truman should succeed to the Presidency. . . . The more conservative members of the Cabinet, the type who are regular Democrats, would increase in influence, for Mr. Truman himself is essentially a party man. . . . In the executive department as a whole there would be one important and rather sweeping change. Among subordinates, the more extreme New Dealers, persons who may be roughly described as the Henry Wallace type, would cease to have much influence. This was the important condition that was assured by defeat of Mr. Wallace. . . . In Mr. Truman, the more extreme New Dealers would not find the same understanding or sympathy."

"There would be greater amity between Congress and the President, and greater power on the side of Congress. Mr. Truman is basically a regular Democrat, has been in the Senate, and would be likely to have regard for its prerogatives. He is not a man of combative temperament. . . . Of course, in the end, the worst offender and the one who will be responsible for the change, if one is made, is the aforementioned Mr. Average Citizen (along with Mrs. and Miss A. C.). What makes them so lazy and just don't care and shiftless? They seem to operate on the blithe assurance that it doesn't matter what they throw around as there is someone who is supposed to clean up the mess. Now in the name of the much advertised manpower shortage, as well as the paper shortage, why should anyone throw garbage around for someone else to pick up? Are people in this part of the country used to having servants to pick up after them? Too bad they have so far forgotten their pioneer tradition of doing their own work and cleaning up their own messes. (One might go into the paper towel situation in public rest rooms, but I refrain.) Do the people of Washington mind having the streets littered or

State Of Roosevelt's Health

THERE IS CERTAIN to be speculation about the state of President Roosevelt's health in the year or more preceding his death. It was an issue in the campaign last fall—whether he was able to stand another four years in the White House.

You heard rumors all around the country, sometimes from men in responsible positions, that he had suffered a stroke. You were even told the date.

One of the commonest stories was that the stroke occurred on the day before the President was reported to have left for South Carolina for a rest at the plantation of Bernard M. Baruch. It so happened that on that day I had a long private conversation with the President in his office at the White House. That was a year ago. He looked a little tired. He had just gone through a long period of concentrated work. He was anxious to get away for a rest cure.

BUT HE SHOWED no signs whatsoever of any infirmity. For an hour and a half he talked with ease and fluency and with the grace and good humor which almost invariably characterized his manner. I could see no evidence of any impairment of the powers that had made him one of the foremost statesmen in the world's history.

He talked about what had already become one of his most cherished hopes for the peace—the concept of trusteeship for dependent colonial peoples. Under the form of trusteeship worked out by the President, each nation with any vital interest—racial or economic—in the area to be put under this form of protection would be represented. My notes of the conversation show that, with the facility which was peculiarly his, he put the idea into homely language as follows:

"It would work out just as it does with a woman whose husband has died and left some property; let's say, she knows nothing about money. Perhaps she hasn't ever signed a check. . . . There are women like that, you know. So her property is put under a trustee for her use."

The President recounted in some detail his difficulties in persuading other nations to accept this proposal. They were reluctant.

Alert Highway Trucking Division

GERMANY.—It was nearly 10 o'clock at night when we arrived in Trier coming into Germany. With the help of M. P.'s we found the regulating officer who was supposed to let our party of two officers, a driver, and myself. But he was entirely indifferent—the only example of less than open-handed hospitality we encountered in about three weeks of migration among the American forces on this side of the Atlantic. His coolness to four visitors who seemed to him to be unnecessary became quite understandable the next morning when we saw how badly shut up the city was and how many Army service units had to be quartered in the houses which remained usable.

But we had no recourse that night except to try our luck elsewhere. Pretty soon we saw signs pointing to H. T. D. (Highway Trucking Division) 6957, which we knew was a big outfit. We made our way down a side street to a row of three-story houses and found the headquarters. The sergeant on duty sent a private for an officer—a young second lieutenant, who was sympathetic. He went out in the dark for about 10 minutes and returned to announce that he had found a couple of rooms down the street where we could spread our bedding rolls.

When we asked for some drinking water we were escorted to the kitchen. Two or three officers trickled in. After we had got acquainted they called in more officers and noncommissioned officers, some of whom had gone to bed. When we asked if we might open some of our K-rations, since we hadn't eaten since lunch, they said "no." Instead, over our protests, they routed out the mess sergeant, who acted as if he were most happy to have the opportunity to cook another meal and soon had some potatoes and frankfurters on the stove.

One of our hosts—I think it was Maj. W. R. Elliott, Jr., of Hartford City, Ind.—brought out his month's post exchange allowance of whisky and another produced a few bottles of excellent Moselle wine. Soon the kitchen was so crowded that it was hard to move. I took down enough names and addresses to fill a column and began to get the story of H. T. D. 6957.

It is a new outfit activated only March 14 for the express purpose of supporting the Third Army's drive into Germany. But most of its constituent units are veterans of the Red Ball and other high speed priority express operations in ETO. Some of them took the 101st and Eighty-second Divisions into Bastogne in the Battle of the Bulge and then brought up ammunition—and suffered some casualties from German artillery.

Altogether there are, or were, 20 trucking companies in this new division, many of them equipped with 10-ton trucks of the trailer type. Their mission was to carry high priority supplies—gasoline, rations and ammunition—from the railroads to the Third Army dumps along the Rhine. This is being transmitted several days after our visit. By now the rail heads, HTD 6957, and the dumps for the Third Army have all moved forward. In fact, some trucks of this outfit had begun to go across the Rhine the day before our visit and had lost two men to German snipers.

They hadn't adopted a name yet for this new trucking line, but the next day Col. J. L. McKinnon, the commanding officer, said it would be called "The ADSEC Express Highway." ADSEC stands for Advance Section Communications Zone. Like the Red Ball, it ran most of the way on roads specially blocked off and marked for one-way traffic.

The spirit of this outfit, as we saw it that night and the following day when we watched some of its units in operation, was very impressive. The officers boasted that their truck drivers—some Negro, some white—were the world's best. The semi-official slogan from the top down was "Keep George Rambling." Excepting a couple of the senior officers, they all spoke of the Third Army of General Patton simply as "George." They seemed to think that George's success or failure depended almost entirely on them. And it certainly was true that they were a vital link and that a few minutes' difference in the turn-around for each truck made a lot of difference in the quantity of supplies available to the Third Army.

Pension Cost Key to Big Task Of Veterans' Administration

By Maj. Thomas M. Nial

Do you know that pensions for disabled veterans and dependents are going to cost $1,080,000,000 for the next fiscal year?

And the appropriation for paying for benefits of the GI Bill of Rights is 295 million smackers. But that's just the first appropriation—a drop in the bucket. Wait until things really get going.

Those costs only indicate how the work of the Veterans' Administration is compounding. While the Veterans' Administration has been weighed down with increased disability claims, National Service Life Insurance claims, death claims from widows and dependents, and so on, that ain't all. Something new has been added.

Two years ago few disabled veterans of the global war had yet been sent to V. A. hospitals. None had been hospitalized for non-service-connected disabilities. Now there are plenty. And not until March 1943 was there any Public Law 16. This created a vocational rehabilitation program for disabled veterans of this war. Then, in June 1944, Public Law 346—the GI Bill—was passed.

The administration of both of these laws was loaded onto the sagging shoulders of the V. A. That outfit sort of staggered like a groggy boxer.

It put out a more than three-page news release about its shortage of help. Did you see it? I doubt if it was even printed. A pint bottle of stale dishwater would be more interesting than news about help shortage.

Any ex-service man or woman who has some ability and no permanent job can certainly hook up with the V. A. some place.

The Washington office alone is short 1000 workers. I've already told about veterans' civil service preferences. See the Civil Service Commission representative in your locality—probably located in the postoffice building.

The V. A. claims it can take care of housing any reasonable number of extra employees in Washington. But no large family groups. I don't know how I'll do it. You've heard about crowded conditions in the Hub of the Universe. And Washington people eat all day long and most of the night. At least, it seems that way, since there's never any place in a restaurant when you try to get in. Officials of the Veterans' Administration already are thinking about moving much of the outfit into areas where there may be help.

Despite manpower shortage within the V. A., its most pressing immediate problem is woman power—in the fields of clerical help, stenography and nursing.

General Hines, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, cites a desperate device that V. A. has had to adopt. Thousands of letters are dictated on discs and then sent hundreds of miles away to be typed. Then the letters go back to Washington. Naturally, such a plan, with other troubles, slows up the whole works.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

Harry Truman will be known as the man who didn't want to be President.

Unassuming, modest, in love with his job as Senator from Missouri, Harry never wanted to be Vice President in the first place. And after he was elected, he dreaded the thought that anything might happen to President Roosevelt. Once, during the campaign, he awoke in a cold sweat. He had dreamed that Roosevelt had died and he was called upon to assume his mantle. Harry said he never had such a terrible dream before in all his life.

Truman had arrived in Speaker Sam Rayburn's office to discuss that same awesome possibility when the call came to hurry to the White House. On Wednesday, the night before, Speaker Rayburn had had a premonition of things to come. Dining with friends, Rayburn said:

"This country is in for a great tragedy, and I feel it's coming very soon. I don't think the President will be with us much longer."

Rayburn's listeners were shocked. When they asked the Speaker for an explanation, he replied: "Roosevelt's not a well man."

Refusing to be more specific, he turned his head away from the table for a moment and then said: "I think I'll have a talk with Harry (Truman) tomorrow. He's got to be prepared to carry a tremendous burden. He's got to get himself ready for this."

Next afternoon, about three, even as Franklin Roosevelt was entering his last hour of life, Rayburn called over to Truman's office in the Senate, said he wanted to see the Vice President. Truman said he'd drop over when the Senate recessed. He had just arrived to see Rayburn, when word came from Steve Early that the event which Truman so long dreaded, finally had transpired.

Inside Story of Chicago Like Calvin Coolidge, Truman was the product of political miracles. The first was when Boss Pendergast of Kansas City picked him, a totally unknown country judge, to run for the Senate seat of the famous Jim Reed. The others, when he was tapped for the Democratic vice presidential nomination last summer in Chicago.

That fateful hour found Truman emotionally disturbed, reluctant, totally unprepared. It has never been revealed, but Truman's first inkling that Roosevelt wanted him came while he was sitting in his room at the Blackstone Hotel. The phone rang. Someone answered it, told Truman that Hopkins was on the phone.

"Hopkins!" he exclaimed, then remarked that it must be Hopkins, the hotel man in Kansas City.

He strode to the phone, there was a moment of silence. It was the Harry Hopkins telling Truman that Roosevelt wanted him as his running mate. Truman seemed dazed. But recovering, he said: "I don't want the job. I don't think they're serious. I'll wait until I hear it from the Chief himself."

Late that night, with the convention on the verge of a three-cornered deadlock, Truman was again back in his room when he received another call—this time from the President.

"Hello, Mr. President," Truman said. "How are you?" There was a pause.

"But what should I do, Mr. President? I don't quite know what to say," were Truman's next words.

"Stay in there and pitch, Harry," Roosevelt replied. "Everything's going to be OK."

"OK," answered Truman, "if you say so. I'll stay in there."

From Hottogs

To Vice Presidency

He hung up rather weakly, said he was going over to see

Mrs. Truman and his daughter Margaret at the Morrison Hotel. Walking down crowded State St., Truman reiterated to friends that he didn't want the job. He was nervous, tense, and worried. "Why don't you go to a night club and have a drink?" advised a friend.

"No, I don't think I will," said Truman. "I think I'll just duck in and see a movie."

He did. Next day, when the vice presidential ballot was finished, the man from Missouri was seated on a box behind the rostrum eating a hotdog and drinking a bottle of pop as a voice came over the microphone: "Will the next Vice President of the United States please come to the rostrum?" The voice had to boom over several times before Harry Truman, the man who didn't want to be President, set down his pop bottle and reluctantly came to the microphone.

Courageous Senator Though Harry Truman dreaded the possibility of becoming President, as Senator he never ran away from a fight.

His chief senatorial battles were as chairman of the so-called Truman Committee. The name resulted from Harry's crusading determination to investigate war or anything else interfering with the war. Harry was so fervent that even Republicans on the committee came to admire and respect him.

Republican Senator Ferguson of Michigan, one of the most fearless men in Congress, joined the committee under the impression that Truman was playing politics. He soon learned to the contrary. If the Administration was to blame, Truman said so. Ferguson came to be a rooter on the Truman team.

Time after time, also, Truman stood up against the Army and Navy. Some Senators put their tails between their legs where the brasshats are concerned. But Truman made Gen. B. B. Somervell write in anguish over the Senate's bias against the Army's uneconomical pipeline to carry oil over the Arctic wastes.

He also told the truth about Jesse Jones' delays in providing synthetic rubber, exposed the secret deal with the Aluminum Corp. for the Shipways plant in Canada, prodded the Navy for failing to accept the Higgins landing craft, thus delaying the European invasion.

Truman's committee also goaded the Army about its terrific waste of food, called attention to the way dollar-a-year men in the War Production Board were favoring their own companies and revealed the disastrous delays in aluminum and steel production.

One of his most significant battles was with the War Department over some cracked airplane engine cylinders built by the Wright company at Cincinnati which had been passed by Army inspectors. At first, Undersecretary of War Patterson bucked him on this, and the Army tried to whitewash its own dereliction. But Truman stood his ground. And in the end the faulty officers were court-martialed.

Though it was called the Truman Committee, actually it operated as a team. Truman believes in teamwork, and teamwork between all his cabinet members and administrative agencies will now be the chief goal of the little man who didn't want to be President.

P.T.A. Election Tonight Election of officers will be held today at 8 p. m. at the monthly meeting of the Cherrydale Parent-Teacher Association in Arlington in the Cherrydale School auditorium. Mrs. J. Y. Weiborn will preside, and Francis W. McPeck, social welfare director for the Washington Federation of Churches, will speak on "Social Responsibility of Parents."

Fred Allen Is a Wise As Well as Witty Man; Notes of the Theater

FOR SOME TIME prior to the event, the drama desks were regaled by bulletins announcing that Fred Allen would be making his first visit to Washington last Wednesday, preliminary to a single stage appearance at Loew's Capitol Theater next morning.

That "first visit" fell a few degrees off the beam, if any, in veteran eyes and so somebody at Carter Barron's buffet supper-reception at the Statler Wednesday night asked him how that idea ever got to going the rounds.

"A good many people," he was heard to say, "have asked the same thing. I think what probably happened was that while writing 'first time in 14 years,' whoever it was was interrupted and didn't pick up where he thought he'd left off. The last time I was here was in 'Three's a Crowd.' Before that it had been the 'Little Show,' with Libby Holman and Clifton Webb, and before a lot of vaudeville bookings at Chase's and Keith's and, still before that, one at the Cosmos."

In Smart Company

It seemed to interest him that some of us had first encountered Frank Fay as an unknown at the old Cosmos the same Frank Fay who currently is enjoying the hit of his life as star of "Harvey" on Broadway—also the late Jack Donohue, nonpareil dancer, as half of the team of Stewart and Donohue, Miss Stewart being Mrs. D. in private life, and a number of others who later emerged in electric lights on what then was still known as the "Gay White Way."

"Fourteen years," he was saying further, "is a pretty long spell of time to be away from an old stamping ground, especially when 13 of them have been largely devoted to radio. But during that time, I understand, I've been here off and on as a noise piped into town one night a week."

The ensuing conversation is what made it clear that Mr. Allen is a man of great wisdom.

When his doctors told him that the grinding routine of constantly searching for suitable broadcast material, preparing scripts, rehearsing, and then being funny against split-second timing, was causing hyper-tensions of the nervous and circulatory systems and he better knock off until they gave him the green light, he took their word for it.

A close friend of his, suffering similar stresses, said and is no longer among the living.

Has Yen to Write

"Letting go all of a sudden," he confided, "was a pretty tough order. His conversion business of making your usual bedtime story rising hour has in it most of the elements necessary to drive a man nuts. That's why I'm doing it in broken doses, by making these pleasant junkies and accepting 'guest' engagements on the other fellows' programs. Once you get used to it, it's fun doing only what you want to do."

One gathers that what he would most like to do is be a writer. Could work out that way sometime. He already has written several pieces that have been published in the better magazines and magazines.

In the meantime, the stage is still his first love—"No matter how long you have been in a part, a new audience at every performance is a constant inspiration." I wouldn't know which he rates next, pictures or radio—"Pictures are nice on the bank account if you can accustom yourself to doing piecemeal; a 5-minute take on the set is as big as an act on the stage. Comedy for the radio has to be 'written down' too much for either comfort or pleasure."

I betcha he could be talked out of that last one, I betcha. In fact, Fred is now considering an offer from a reputable and reliable company that wants to pay him a sizable salary to remain idle for 65 weeks, if at the end of that time he will sign a year's contract to broadcast under its sponsorship.

That, in a manner of speaking, is one for the book!

Notwithstanding the fact that the first baseball game of the big league season at Griffith Stadium is habitually a complete sellout, 2000 free tickets have been laid aside for servicemen in the Washington area for today's opener between the Washington Senators and the New York Yankees, according to weekend advice from the District of Columbia War Activities Committee of the amusement industry and the War Hospitality Committee of the Community War Fund, sponsors of the Ticket Hut, between 12th and 14th sts. on E and the Avenue.

And it doesn't stop there. For the remainder of the 1945 season, a grand total of approximately 150,000 free pasteboards will be given the boys in uniform for the Senators' home games—thanks to the open-hearted generosity of Clark Griffith, president of the club, and the enterprise of Mrs. Clark Davis, wife of the local theater executive, who made the opening day arrangements with Secretary Ed Eynon.

Howard F. Wentworth, president; Lieut. James George, USNR, vice president; Mrs. Margaret Reade, secretary; and Mrs. B. C. Beck, treasurer, are announced as the officers of the newly organized Arlington Little Theater, just over the river in Virginia. Some 200 members strong, the group last week scored an initial hit with "Junior Miss" and are actively laying plans for their first major season, beginning next September. As a further tune-up, however, Director Walter Timm, on Thursday night, will hold try-outs in the Arlington War Recreation Center, 3150 Wilson blvd., at 8 p. m., for "Bedside Manners," by Kenyon Nicholson and S. N. Behrman, the final one-act play to be presented before closing down for the summer.

Broadway Gazette

New York, April 15. HISTORY DEPT.: General Brehon Somervell went to France before our armies crossed the Rhine and conferred with the top engineers in the Allied forces. He asked them if they had completed the plans for the bridges to be used in the Rhine crossings. They nodded. Somervell asked how long it would take to build those bridges.

One said 14 days, another 16, a third said 15—the lowest estimate was 12 days. "Gentlemen, I see that you're not familiar with Caesar's Commentaries," said Gen. Somervell. "Caesar bridged the Rhine in 10 days. Let it not be said that engineering has not advanced in 2000 years."

TRAVEL NOTE: Sylvia Porter, the financial columnist, will cover the United Nations Conference for the New York Post. Unlike the other correspondents, who are preparing for the conference by studying the Bretton Woods and Dumbarton Oaks agreements, Miss Porter has concentrated on memorizing four Russian sentences: "I Love You," "What's New?" "Yes," "Tell Me."

POLITICS: A group of businessmen held a conference to discuss the head of a government agency whose policies they believe to be destructive. They finally asked the advice of David Sarnoff, head of RCA. Sarnoff recited some Russian words. The industrialists were puzzled. "That is an old Russian proverb," Sarnoff explained. "It means 'Don't shoot the Car; you may wound up a worse soundo!'"

SOCIAL NOTE: When Donald Nelson was in China he and his aide, Edward Locke, lived at the home of a wealthy Chinese. Their beds were covered with netting, as protection against insects, scorpions, etc. One morning Locke reported that during the night he found a large rat in his room, chased it, and bashed its head with a club. "Then I took it outside, and gave it to the soldier-guard," Locke told Nelson. "He patted its head until it was revived, and set it loose. He said when a rat comes to a man's house that's a sign that the man has food, and therefore wealth and distinction."

RADIO: Gene Sarazen was scheduled to make a CBS broadcast in New York. Paul Porter, chairman of the FCC, phoned

"Fraternalism Yours," fifth production of the season, for a two-week run in Undercroft Auditorium, 900 Massachusetts ave. . . . Curtain at 8:15 p. m.

And-That-Reminds-Me Note

Curtains for this right now!

CBS and asked if it would be considered an abuse of his powers if CBS would permit Sarazen's broadcast to emanate from Washington instead of New York. "We have a golf match at Burning Tree," said Porter, "and we want a surprise addition for our foursome." . . . CBS agreed, Sarazen went to Washington, played, and lost $4.

BIRTHS, ETC.: Representative Lyndon Johnson of Texas was surprised by the speed with which the Senate confirmed Kentucky's Fred Vinson as head of the RFC and then as Jimmy Byrnes' successor; its confirmation of Kentucky's Paul Porter as head of the FCC, and the confirmation of Kentucky's Ed Prichard as Vinson's counsel. "Our folks," said the Representative Johnson, "are getting ready to move from Texas to Kentucky to get confirmed quickly. And I hear," added Representative Johnson, "that Aubrey Williams is sore at his Ma for not passing through Kentucky when he was born."

FINANCE: Dr. Harry D. White, Asst. Secy. of the Treasury, was in New York a few days ago and revealed this story of psychological warfare: Six months before the invasion of Europe, the Combined Staffs asked him to devise a new and complete monetary system for Belgium. No mention was made of France, Holland, Denmark or Norway—just Belgium, and he was warned that this assignment was extremely confidential. . . . Dr. White mentioned it to no one. A few months later he finished the job. Then the armies invaded France, where there was heavy opposition, but not Belgium, where the Nazis were waiting in large numbers.

LOCAL NEWS: Ben Hecht has written the first radio broadcast of the United Nations Conference. . . . Gene Sarazen now operates an apple farm. The golfer has 1000 bushels of apples on hand. He is willing to trade a bushel of apples for one prewar golf ball. . . . Palmer Hoyt, publisher of the Portland Oregonian, will visit Guam, Iwo Jima and other Pacific outposts on a mission for the Navy. . . . Leon Henderson was offered a job with the Reparations Commission in Moscow. He cabled from China reporting that he has a better job in mind. . . . Long Beach will name its new boardwalk the Ike Eisenhower Boulevard.

THEATER: Margo Jones, co-director of Tennessee Williams' prize-winning play, "The Glass Menagerie," returned to Dallas last week. She will be the director of a new production, the Dallas Civic Repertory Theater. Eugene McDermott, a wealthy Texas oil geologist, has given her $10,000 for pre-organizational activities. And the City of Dallas probably will build the playhouse which will be devoted to developing the talents of new, promising playwrights.

Manufacturing Advantages

Memphis offers industry access to growing new markets and a wealth of resources, cotton, hardwood lumber and minerals. Barges on the Mississippi River bring in steel, petroleum and outside raw materials. Well-situated industrial acreage available. Increased buying power in primary and secondary markets provides healthy outlets for manufactured goods. City-County governments pledged to industrial development.

Distribution Advantages

Memphis on the Mississippi is a logical distribution point. The entire South can be served from Memphis where freight rates are most favorable. Modern barge lines on the Inland Waterways, 10 trunk line railroads with 17 radiating lines, 54 motor freight lines and leading airlines serve Memphis and the Memphis market.

Economic Advantages

Here in the "Sunny South" where there is year-round favorable climate, there are skilled workers and easily trained labor. Pure, soft, artesian water, low-cost (TVA) electric power, natural gas, all municipally owned. Tax rates have declined steadily since 1932. There is no sales or manufacturing tax in Tennessee. Memphis has a Class "2" insurance rating—the best possible.

Location Efficiency

Many industries have already found Memphis has "Location Efficiency." Raymond C. Firestone says: "From a distribution standpoint, the advantages of the city are unexcelled." Follow the lead of Firestone, duPont, Ford, General Motors, Quaker Oats and 600 other manufacturers in choosing Memphis and Shelby County; Tennessee for new and additional industrial locations.

Realism Dictates U. S. Keep Seized Islands, Yarnell Says

By Harry E. Yarnell

Editor, U. S. N. Review

In a previous article on "What we should do with Japan," it was proposed that the Marshalls, Carolines, Marianas, Pelews, and Bonins should be taken over by the United States.

Objections to such a procedure have been voiced by some on the grounds that such a course would be contrary to the Atlantic Charter, the Cairo Declaration, and that the former status of these islands was that of a mandate to Japan under the League of Nations. They suggest that these islands should continue as a mandate under the United States, or that there should be a condominium form of government under the leading powers such as now exists in the New Hebrides.

Realists point out in rebuttal that the mandate system failed, that these islands are of vital importance to the United States, that their capture has cost us heavily in lives, and that we cannot allow a similar condition to arise in the future.

There is but little doubt that the views of the realists will prevail. Never again must we expend the blood and treasure being poured out today to maintain our security in the Pacific. We failed to secure the Marshalls, the Carolines and Marianas, with the exception of Guam, after the Spanish-American War through the short-sightedness of those in charge of our foreign affairs in those days. How different the situation would be today if men with the vision and courage of Webster or Seward had been in power at that time, and later during World War I and at Versailles.

An excellent account of the political background of the islands is contained in an article by Huntington Gilchrist in the July, 1944, issue of Foreign Affairs.

The islands would not be taken over for reasons of economic profit. Their maintenance would be a matter of considerable expenditure. Guam and Samoa have never been self-supporting since their acquisition by the United States. While the naval governments that have been in charge have not been perfect, they have carried out strictly the policy which should be followed in the local administration of all the islands, which is that the welfare of the natives is the primary consideration. As a step in that direction, all Japanese now in the islands should be repatriated.

U. S. Should Open Islands

American control of the islands does not mean that all access to them by other nations would be barred, as was the case under Japanese domination. Free access to all ports, bases and airports, military and commercial, should be permitted on a reciprocal basis. As the islands have little economic value, there is small possibility of international difficulties arising over such matters.

Australia and New Zealand will doubtless claim similar control over the areas now mandated to them south of the Equator, and there is no reason why such claims should not be recognized. From the defense point of view these two Dominions have interests similar to those of the United States, as has been demonstrated in the two world wars.

The French colonial possessions in the Pacific will doubtless remain with that nation. They are no threat to our security so long as they remain in the hands of that nation. There is the possibility, however, that France might, some time, contemplate the transfer of her Pacific islands to some other nation. Such a transfer would be a matter of major interest to the United States and suggests the following future policy:

There shall be no transfer of sovereignty of islands in the Pacific without the knowledge and consent of the United States.

Experience Supports Policy

The experience of the past 50 years emphasizes the necessity of such a policy. In 1898, Spain agreed by secret treaty to sell her interests in the Carolines and Marshalls to Germany. In 1917, Great Britain, France and Russia secretly agreed to support Japan's claims to Micronesia. Although the United States was on the verge of entering the war on the side of the Allies at that time, we were never informed of this agreement which was so vital to our interest. Surely it must not happen again.

Japan should be deprived of the Bonin and Volcano Islands. They have no commercial value, but have been utilized as strong points and stepping stones in her plans for Pacific domination. They should be placed in the custody of the United States.

To summarize briefly the proposed postwar status of the Pacific islands under discussion:

The United States will be given permanent custody of the Marshalls, Carolines, Marianas, Pelews, Bonins and Volcano Islands.

In the administration of the islands the welfare of the native people will be given primary consideration with special reference to their local governments, land tenure, customs and economic conditions.

All Japanese in the islands will be repatriated.

The United States will conform to such rules as may be laid down by a general world organization for the government of dependent areas.

The United States will be free to build such military, naval and commercial bases, ports and airfields as may be necessary for the policing of the Pacific, and for future sea and air transportation.

These bases, ports and airfields will be open to all nations on a reciprocal basis.

In the future there will be no transfer of sovereignty of Pacific islands without the approval of the United States.

Churchill sat at Christmas Day services in 1941. The sextons said it was "our tribute to the man who has done so much for our race."

4000 at Inter-Faith Service

More than 4000 men, women and children filled Constitution Hall for the inter-faith memorial program of the Committee on Religious Life in the Nation's Capital.

They heard tribute to their late President from the Rev. Edmund S. Walsh, S. J., vice president of Georgetown University; Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld, spiritual leader of the Washington Hebrew Congregation; and Dr. Frederick Brown Harris, chaplain of the Senate and Foundry Methodist minister. They heard musical salutes from the Navy Band and combined choirs of Washington churches.

Said Father Walsh: "It is for us the living to take solace from the sentiment expressed in a similar calamity. 'Fellow citizens' God reigns and the Government in Washington still lives.'"

"God... Takes Good Ends"

"Leadership now passes to a constitutionally-ordained successor under circumstances that sustain us in this hour of sorrow and proclaim to the world, friend and foe alike, that the American system is a government of law, under God, not the sport or whim of disputatious men. The wisdom of God from evil still takes good ends. The orderly and unbroken transmission of the symbols of authority in this bereaved Republic and the reassertion of disciplined freedom and steady democracy even amidst the carnage and destruction of universal disorder is an additional testament of faith and unimpaired resolve flashing good cheer across the oceans from the New World to the agonized peoples of the Old."

Dr. Gerstenfeld, addressing the throng a few minutes before, praised Mr. Roosevelt for having "rallied his people in a day of infamy. As the commander-in-chief of this free land he had the genius to carry the struggle to the enemy, instead of awaiting the invasion of the foe."

"Across Red Sea..."

"He led his people across the Red Sea of tragedy, in the black night of suffering, toward the foot of a great covenant of Sinai, a covenant of the righteousness of the morrow for which he had labored through the years," said he, adding:

"From Casablanca to Teheran, from Quebec to Yalta this brave spirit who could not walk, but whose courage stalked across the whole earth, rallied the warriors and took counsel with the statesmen, until in this very hour Caesars are in the dust and the Atlases are fleeing to their mountain caves amidst the ruins of their plunder."

The last citadel of the enemy in Europe is about to fall before the brave men of the world moving in as a wall of steel around the lairs of evil. On the uttermost naked and to move in circles of the elite, he became the sympathetic servant of all, the very symbol of the hopes and yearnings of little men and humble people. For he learned the supreme secret of how to walk with kings nor lose the common touch.

Dr. Harris, who has preached to a number of congregations in which the late President was a worshiper, said Mr. Roosevelt "carried the banner of human hope for all mankind."

"Men and women under all skies, exploited and enslaved, degraded, debased, deceived, kept from a more abundant life, found in him a white-plumed knight whose shining sword was dedicated to their cause. Born to special privilege

Wise Investing

By Roger W. Babson

Fundamentals Emphasized

"Mr. Babson, I have sold my business, where can I invest the proceeds?" "My wife and I are getting along in years, in what can we invest our money so that we will be assured of a moderate income for the rest of our lives?" "I have just inherited $5000, how can I double this money quickly?" These questions are typical of the many asked me from week to week. Behind each lies the instinctive desire of all human beings for self-protection.

Before entering upon an important venture—and certainly before buying any stock—it is imperative that you know yourself. Self-control, patience and courage are essential to success. Have you the self-control to follow a strict investment policy? Do rumors and minor fluctuations fail to sway you? Have you the patience to hold your funds liquid until a real bargain comes your way? Do you resist jumping into a bull market in the hope of scalping a few points profit on the advances? Have you the courage to buy when the news is pessimistic and everyone about you is selling? Will you sell when stocks are on the upgrade and everybody is talking about the new highs to be reached?

If you can answer "Yes" to each of these questions and if you have some extra money to invest, you have the attributes for becoming successful. Then you can determine your own particular needs and select a diversified group of securities which will meet these requirements. After you have purchased your securities, do not be concerned over day-to-day fluctuations. Avoid jumping from one stock to another in the hope of picking a few points profit here and there. Do not follow the crowd. Always bear in mind that in finance the herd instinct is fatal.

Before buying any stock you should decide what you expect of it. In the case of the man who has sold his business, the chances are that he will want to own stocks that will appreciate in value. Therefore, he would do well to buy into a young industry—possibly television, plastics or electronics. To the elderly people who want income, I suggest "Series G" Government bonds and the securities of well-established companies with a good dividend record and a promising future. To the young person who has inherited the $5000, I say, "The stock market is no royal road to easy money. A horse race would be just as good a bet and might prove more exciting!"

The investor should carefully study the trend of the market and the outlook for the industry into which he plans to buy. This shows when to buy. He should not analyze the various companies in that industry. He will then select that company which is making the most progress. This company need not necessarily be the largest in its field nor, perhaps, the oldest, but it must be well managed and active. Pay particular attention to the personnel. Remember that the future of every company will depend upon the character of the individuals who control and manage it.

Approach the stock market in an intelligent manner. Follow the lead of successful institutions and buy the securities they buy. You can determine this by studying reports of insurance companies. Learn to swim before venturing into deep water and above all be wary of tips from well-meaning friends.

Even in the rare instances where such a tip makes good temporarily, it usually leads to loss in the end because it is based on ephemeral rather than fundamental factors. The successful investor must know what to buy or sell, as well as when to buy or sell.

Mrs. Mary S. Huber, 3745 Gunston rd., Parkliff, Alexandria, picked up The Post on Sunday, April 8, gave a gasp and stared again at a picture on the first page that was incredulously stark and true.

She stared again because she identified in that picture her husband, Maj. Henry S. Huber, 38, listed by the War Department as a prisoner of war in Germany. But upon reading the caption of the photo, Mrs. Huber learned for the first time that her husband was among those Americans freed by the U. S. First Army from the German prison camp at Limburg. He was shown with several emaciated men on the cot, and was the only unidentified man in the picture.

Now she is waiting day by day for the War Department's official announcement that her husband is alive and free—or so she is hoping. Mrs. Huber recently received a letter from a hospital chaplain saying that her husband became a prisoner because he refused to leave the nontransportable patients in his field hospital in Luxembourg.

According to the letter received from the hospital chaplain, Major Huber had several severely wounded men in his field hospital when the Germans broke through the Belgian Bulge in their winter offensive. Many of these men could not be moved. While the ambulance patients were moved to the rear, Major Huber remained behind to take care of his men. When they arrived at the prison camp, he became the camp's medical officer. The picture published on the front page of The Post last Sunday showed Major Huber leaning over three of the emaciated men who were liberated with him.

Before being activated in the service, Major Huber was a member of the New York National Guard and was a practicing physician and surgeon in New York. He was on the staff of King's Hospital and was starting to specialize in surgery when he was called to active duty.

A native of New York, Major Huber is a graduate of Columbia University and of Columbia's School of Physicians and Surgeons. On April 3, Mary Wynne, 5, the Hubers' oldest daughter, received a letter from her father on her birthday, but he gave no details of his capture or imprisonment in Germany. He indicated, Mrs. Huber said, that he might be sent to England and then home. The other children of the couple are Harriet, 22 months, and Jane, 7 months old. Jane has not been seen by her father.

Girl, 17, Newcomer to Community, Meets Savage Rudeness at School, as She Tries To Make Friends of Her Classmates

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl 17 years old, a junior in high school. I have the greatest mother and dad in the world; expensive clothes, a beautiful home and all the spending money I need. But there is something money cannot buy—and that is friends. Recently we moved to this community, coming from Chicago, where I was very happy and had many friends. I have tried to make friends at this new school, but the boys and girls ignore me.

The reason they boycott me is because I am very homesick. That may sound foolish, but it is true. Every day, when I walk into class or am called upon to recite, here is what happens: The girls giggle and the boys (without fail) say, "Hello, Horror!" or "Hi, Nightmare." Remarks like these hurt my feelings. They seem to forget it is not easy to come to a strange school and try to make friends among strangers.

Boys Sneer, Girls Giggle

I THOUGHT by asking some of the girls and boys to come to our house some Friday night, we have a large rumormongering, with records, ping pong tables, piano, etc.—that things would change. But they all refused the invitation. In fact, some even walked away before I was through talking. After this, I decided to approach one of the girls and ask her why they refused, why they acted so strangely. She answered very coldly, "We don't bother with horrors."

I have never considered myself a glamour girl; and I don't walk about as though I love myself. I told mother about the things that were said, and she told me not to bother with them. She seems to forget a girl my age would like companionship. This may not seem like a problem to you; but I do need advice. Please answer soon.

She Is Dealing With Boneheads

DEAR R. D.: You've got poise and courage to spare; and more civilized instincts in your little finger than could be wrung out of the packed-down carcasses of all your new classmates put together. You're having your first brush with bonehead boys and buffoons; most of whom, I venture to say, think the horizon ends at the next whistle stop. Looking them over, both on and between the lines of your letter, I frankly don't think their favor is worth courting.

They are the real horrors—in their wolf pack cruelty and cowardice, whirling on you with brainless leers and bared fangs because their leaders tossed them that cue; because none of them has the guts and gumption to break rank and be decent to a newcomer, while the pack sentiment is running at high tide to the contrary. So what to do? In my opinion, your parents ought to yank you out of this institution and send you to a private school, where the student body is made up of girls from all over the country, and you won't have to hurt yourself against hostile provincialism, ossified to arrowhead sharpness, in bidding for friends.

Thumbs Down On This School

THE reason I don't say, "Stick it out," is because it is nothing worth having or knowing, that you could gain from standing this

Good Posture Depends Upon Sound Health

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

A child's good posture results not only from good nourishment during infancy and childhood but from good health habits. Good posture is only secondarily a matter of exercise.

I have little faith in mechanical means of achieving good posture. What is needed is a strong set of muscles which will support the backbone and those muscles develop if the child is supplied with the proper growth foods and plays heartily.

Baby Knows His Strength

The small baby's reluctance to sit up should not be attributed to lack of support. It is the baby's recognition that his back is not strong enough to bear such strain.

An effort should be made to improve the whole diet with the confidence that when baby is ready and able he will struggle to sit up. Strong babies make their own opportunities and cannot be denied the exercise their muscles demand. There are always ways to discourage good posture to which parents should be alert. Large pillows which elevate the child's head out of line with his spine are undesirable. Up to the fifth year or beyond the child has no need for a pillow, even a small one.

Exercises Correct Bad Posture

To allow a child to sleep on a weak-springed bed which sags in the middle, or on a lumpy, uneven mattress is an encouragement to poor posture.

Artificial exercises to correct poor posture would be valuable but poor posture itself should not develop if the child has every opportunity for normal, vigorous, healthy play.

gaff, meekly or grimly. You have behaved remarkably well; have displayed really splendid emotional balance, in taking their savage rudeness on the chin and bravely returning civilized overtures. Psychologically, you are topnotch; and off the social front, you are no greenhorn.

What you are up against here is a job-lot of warped mentalities. You stand before them as a person of normal stature would stand before dwarfs. And since your view of life can never be theirs, nor can they reach up to the civilized outlook—it just isn't in the cards to be pals with them. So my advice, which I urge on your parents, is to solve the problem by switching to a school of a different type.

Many Houses On Tour Open For First Time

Pilgrims making the tour of historic Alexandria houses Saturday, May 5, from 10 a. m. to 6 p. m., sponsored by the woman's auxiliary of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, will find unusual features in several of the homes which are being opened to the public for the first time.

Among them is the four-story brick residence of Dr. and Mrs. Laurence M. Thompson at 210 Duke st., known as the Dr. James Craik house for its first owner, the surgeon-general of the Continental Army in the Revolution, who was with General Washington in every battle from Great Meadows to Yorktown.

Unoccupied for Decades

Dr. and Mrs. Thompson in purchasing the Craik house from Miss Blondeville Malone, Washington, after it had been unoccupied for more than 10 years, spent a year and a half in remodeling and redecorating the old house before moving in last October from their former residence on South Lee st. They also acquired the Corryell house next door, and in tearing it down saved the best parts of the interior for incorporation into the Craik house.

Tickets with miniature maps of the points of interest will be available at the Alexandria Chamber of Commerce Building beginning May 1. On the day of the tour tickets with the maps may be obtained at any one of the 10 houses, the Chamber of Commerce, the George Mason Hotel and at the Stabler-Leadbeater Apothecary Shop, a landmark of the tour.

Luncheon to Be Served

For the first time since the war placed restrictions upon the tours, luncheon will be served at the parish house of Christ Episcopal Church, which is cooperating in the St. Paul's benefit.

Mrs. Minot C. Mulligan is president of the league and has appointed Mrs. Donald S. King chairman of the exhibit. She is being assisted by Mrs. Henry Scheel, Mrs. Cary Smith, Mrs. Garth James, Miss Francis Maigne, Mrs. Benjamin F. Boan and Mrs. William Dillon.

Strawberries and Rhubarb Make Delectable Jams

Strawberries are now in season. This colorful fruit has more to recommend it than deliciousness. It is rich in vitamin C. Then, too, the strawberry is a fruit that gets along with other foods such as rhubarb which is also in season. Since rhubarb is not as expensive as strawberries, it is especially fine to use as an extender.

The cooks who can recall the days of World War I know that it was then that home canning got its real start. To be sure, pioneer woman had canned. But by the time of the first World War canners were more common and were often used for the first time in the home.

The canning of this wartime differs from the last in that we've learned ways of packing more food value into the jars by retaining vitamins and minerals which were often lost previously under home-canning conditions.

The strawberries you plan to can may not yet be available, but that doesn't mean that you must not check on jars, rims, rubbers and equipment—and sugar. This is one year that you will want to get the berries into glasses so you'll have them next winter at snow flurry time.

Don't worry too much about the sugar. You can take advantage of the extra allotment for home-canning. But go easy with it and make it stretch as far as possible. Thin or medium sirup will do quite as well as heavy sirup. In fact, fruit can be canned without any sugar at all, although the product will not be as attractive in appearance.

Measure 2½ cups sugar and 2½ cups light corn sirup. Set aside. Measure 3 cups prepared fruit into a 5 or 6 quart kettle, filling last cup with water if necessary. Place over most intense heat. Add 1 box powdered fruit pectin, mix well and stir until mixture comes to a full rolling boil and boil hard for 1 minute. Remove from fire, skim, pour quickly into sterilized jars or glasses. Paraffin at once. Makes about nine glasses, six fluid ounces each.

Town Talk—

Princess Boncompagni to Return To Gotham; Mrs. Dewey Cancels Party

By Eva Hinton

"WHERE were you when you heard of the President's death?" and "What will we do now?" are the two questions most asked these last few days.

The answers to the first question have been as varied as the people who answered it, but to the second the answers have been unanimous. "We will all pull together and help President Truman the best we can."

Mrs. Charles Dewey, whose husband, the former representative, often has opposed President Roosevelt, raised her voice for unity with, "Let's back our new President." She is canceling her party tomorrow in honor of Princess Margaret Boncompagni to which she had invited the 71 members of the committee of American Relief for France.

Princess Boncompagni, honorary vice chairman of American Relief for France, is staying at the Sulgrave Club but will return to New York before the period of mourning is over.

Mrs. Dewey, co-chairman of the committee, hopes to entertain for Princess Boncompagni sometime later in the season.

"This is a great country and a real democracy!" said Mrs. Dewey in telling me how she heard of the President's sudden passing. She was at a tea where guests bore official titles and names of great importance. In came someone whose rank was just "ordinary citizen" and broke the news to all the great.

She had heard it from a taxi driver's radio. And so it was that "the little man," "the forgotten man," "the man in the street" was the first to drop a tear for the President who had tried so long and with all his strength to serve him.

STOPPING in Washington on his way to the San Francisco Conference is Etienne Burin des Rois, former attache of the French

Embassy in Washington. The popular diplomat has seen service under General Catroux and is now in General de Gaulle's cabinet as liaison with the French Foreign Office.

In San Francisco he will find his old friend and former colleague, Baron James Baeyens. Baron Baeyens is French consul general in San Francisco and, with Baroness Baeyens and the children, has taken a house there.

He writes that house-hunting is as exciting a sport out there as it is in Washington. He hopes that all his friends who come to the conference will give "looking up James Baeyens" a top priority on their agenda.

LARGE POSTWAR REFRIGERATOR MARKET IN IOWA

DES MOINES, IOWA—After the war Iowans hope to invest $25,382,150 in 177,312 electric gas and ice refrigerators, THE IOWA POLL reveals in a recent survey.

Placing unit valuation at $150, for projecting the findings, the survey indicates that 23% of Iowans intend to buy 158,581 electric refrigerators at a retail value of $23,787,150. Similar projections indicate a market of 8,887 for gas and 8,844 for ice refrigerators.

Iowans reached by field reporters for THE IOWA POLL were also asked which appliance they needed most. Refrigerators led the list in all groups:

|                        | City | Town | Farm |

| Now own unit . . . 55% | 56%  | 13%  | 13%  |
| Do not own . . . 45%   | 44%  | 87%  | 87%  |

Separating those who intend to buy electric refrigerators on the basis of present ownership gives this result:

AP Man Recalls Roosevelt's Decisiveness in Navy Post

By Kike L. Simpson

(Associated Press staff writer, who knew Mr. Roosevelt for 30 years.)
(Second article of a series.)

When Franklin Roosevelt was Assistant Secretary of the Navy, his office was a rendezvous for the handful of newspaper men who "covered" the War-State-Navy building.

He wanted it that way. So did Louie Howe, his secretary—and even more. For Louie, even that far back, was busy with dreams of a second President Roosevelt. "The boss," as he was known to Louie and in time to all of us, may have shared them. I do not know. He never said so.

This big, cheerful, energetic young New Yorker was getting his first taste of national political life. He was already a veteran of New York State politics. The friendship between Al Smith, Tammany sachem from the sidewalks of New York, and the light-hearted scion of a bluestocking, upstate Dutch family had already been formed. They had sat together in New York State's seething legislative halls.

A Tie That Failed

The political and personal bond between these two great Americans did not last. I will have more to say later of its break as I saw it as close hand.

Right now I would like to emphasize that through it all I never heard Franklin Roosevelt say a slighting word about Al Smith. I like to think that both men always harbored respect, admiration, even affection, for each other. I know Frank Roosevelt felt that way.

Groping back for memories of Roosevelt at the Navy Department through the time-fogged years I find them indistinct except for the flowing warmth of his sunny, friendly disposition.

At the Navy Department he was charged with the vexing task of keeping navy yard wage scales adjusted to those of each yard's region.

I think it likely that Job had more than a little to do with shaping his ideas on governmental labor policies. He was very sensitive to the political power labor represented, but he was no less sensitive to the lot of labor, or underdogs everywhere. We all knew that in our earliest contacts with him.

Not Afraid of Decisions

All of us also noted quickly something else about the man. We soon observed that when his chief, Navy Secretary Joseph Daniels, was away and Roosevelt was Acting Secretary, things were likely to happen.

He was ready always to make quick policy decisions, and ready unhesitatingly to accept full responsibility. He believed, I think, in the business world's axiom that a decision made promptly is better, even if proved wrong, than a sounder action reached in delay and uncertainty.

To me, at least, there is significance in that Roosevelt trait. Many years later in those hectic, heartening "first hundred days" of his first Administration, presidential policy decisions flowed from the White House in a ceaseless flood.

Navy Bureau chiefs of that older day, or some of them, noted that trait. If a pet project needed secretarial sanction, they frequently held it until Roosevelt was Acting Secretary. Not that Daniels was likely to turn thumbs down on a good idea, but quick action was assured when Roosevelt was at the helm.

Quick to Do Favor

In that war I had a young nephew in the Navy, an enlisted man who had tossed college aside to volunteer. He was aboard a ship of the old "crab fleet," the flotilla and superannated pre-dreadnaughts which after the armistice were pressed into emergency service as transports to hasten the homecoming of Pershing's crusaders from France.

The ship had trudged twice across the Atlantic and was billed for a third round-trip when my brother, the boy's father, wired from California that if he sailed with her it would throw him back another year or six months at least in college.

Mr. Roosevelt was Acting Secretary that day. I dumped my problem in his lap. He wrote a telegram to the naval commandant at Norfolk directing that my nephew be set ashore and discharged. It went off, even though the ship had sailed.

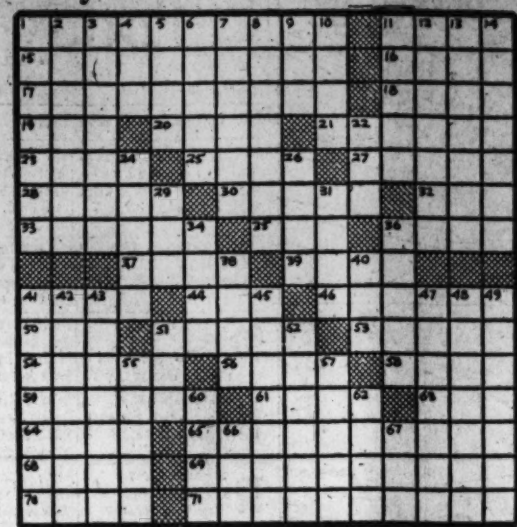

Next morning the boy was ringing my doorbell before I was up. I had underrated the effect of a secretarial signature in the Navy, even that of an Acting Secretary. The lad had been jerked off the ship before she cleared the capes, rushed back to Norfolk and discharged in time to catch the night boat to Washington.

Unconcerned With Details

About that time the first eastward passage of the Atlantic by airplane, the old NCs was worked up by the Navy Department.

Destroyers were mile-posted or 50-mile-posted along the way to Halifax, N. S., the first stop. At the Navy communications room we were watching the flight of the NC-4 (the other planes had already
